Good for you, and I'm sorry you have to do that. None of us should have to do that. The bible teaches us to respect authority. Ok, but some of these folks need to stop pushing the evil in our faces!

Thank you [REDACTED]

[REDACTED], I wanted to tell you that I appreciate your response to Mrs. Stettler. I am in the process of writing my own email to another teacher and Mr. Cahan for how they presented the same information to my daughter this morning. The same thing except even going as far to say that the event this summer weren't as important, and that the President had this done purposely with the support of Antifa.

Thanks Lisa, sorry if I was rough, but it has gotten old this past year, hearing from those who have a microphone how evil "our kind" of people (aka pro life Christian) are. Nightly I have to explain to [REDACTED] that diverse opinions are good and that it is not just a catchy phrase. We spend a lot of time understanding our constitution (her favorite class in years past), and discuss often the bill of rights and what the 5 freedoms in the 1st article represent in practice. You and I can disagree on philosophy, but likely agree that those freedoms are being jeopardized as of late. I want [REDACTED] to love our neighbors and love our country, and be proud of the freedoms that our family has fought to preserve.

Keep up the good work. Encourage the debate. And yes, even political debate. Its healthy. I think we all, including myself, just need to be more accepting of what the true meaning of diversity represents.

Thanks, [REDACTED]

Mr. [REDACTED]

Thank you for writing to let me know your response to my power point. I very much appreciate your opinion. In retrospect, I agree that my words were too opinionated and do not have a place in the classroom. I apologize for this lapse of judgment on my part. I have amended the power point and included links to speeches by senators that refer to the Enlightenment ideals we are studying. I will deliver the same message to students tomorrow. Sincerely,
Lisa Stettler

Lisa:

Please refrain from ever showing this opinionated garbage to my daughter in a public education forum again. My tax dollars are to support an education, not an indoctrination. The awful events of yesterday, in context to the entire year for that matter, could have been a wonderful teaching moment today.

The bulleted points in Lisa Stettler's document are highly opinionated and only demonstrate a liberal ideology.

- Informed citizenry? As in the on-going federal case against the on-line media behemoths for suppression of conservative speech?
- People yesterday can't differentiate facts from lies? Like the ones who have burned and looted our country for the past year can? Liars?
- Fair election, supported by facts? As disputed by over 10,000 individual sworn affidavits and objected to by over 60 US congressmen?
- Repeating a false claim? Like Russia collusion?
- How Hitler came to power? As in media suppression, one party rule, and disarming its citizens?

If you wish to express outrage in context to a history lesson, how about doing so with an objective viewpoint. Drawing a reference is much different than inference, and inference while name calling via association with homicidal dictators is not in the best interest of our kids. My daughter loves history. Your class. But having to explain to her why our family viewpoints do not make us liars or supporters of Adolph Hitler is a conversation I'd rather not have.
