The military has a love/hate relationship with the internet

level 2

The internet was a child of the cold war. Now the military has to babysit it.

As someone with no idea how the military works... could someone get in trouble for taking a picture like this? I realize this is nonsense in this case, but I would imagine photos of an Air Force briefing are probably discouraged in general?

level 2

I got in trouble for taking a picture inside of a VA hospital. Some military guy told me it is illegal to take pictures inside a federal building. So if that guy wasn't bullshitting me then yes they could get in trouble for this picture. Is it actually something they enforce- probably depends.

level 2

divsky2 2 points · 9 days ago

Of course, just imagine if this kind of information fell into the hands of our enemies.

level 2

craaaaa 2 points · 9 days ago

Nah it was probably just a typical weekly safety brief that everyone has to attend.

level 2

leaguesubredditarbo 2 points · 9 days ago

As someone who used to be in the Army, I guarantee this was put in as a joke.

level 2

CrabSmoke 2 points · 9 days ago

This is actually a brief on the area 51 thing. Honestly I hope the military is doing these briefs as a joke but if they take the area 51 raid seriously we need to do something.

level 2

AssGovProAnal 2 points · 9 days ago

No, this is just an unclassified brief using copywrited characters without permission.

You can tell Naruto next drill weekend. He'll be the airman running like an idiot to formation.

That's a 2nd Lt (officer with <2 years) with no career field badge meaning he's in training. This is definitely an exercise of "ok Lt for training we're going to do a mock briefing on the Area 51 meme"

As a former Air Force Officer, I can assure you the slides were done by a Lieutenant, and it was probably the most rewarding day of work he has had yet. PowerPoint, Outlook and Excel (if you are technical) are the AF Officers main tools. So going through the internet and making a slide deck about the Area-51 raid memes sounds amazing.

I'd love to see a General (stars) level slide with that Area-51 memes. 'General level' slides are more condensed and pretty. Generals don't like a lot of slides, or the slide to be busy, but is must still have all the info. So it would probably be a cool timeline with arrows and a sweet color palette... See? We can't get enough power point. It's like how every marine is a rifleman, every AF Officer is a "Microsoft Officer Power User."

IDK_SoundsRight 60 points · 9 days ago · edited 9 days ago

Sadly. Running like that works. You lean forward on your toes so that you almost fall over. And let your reflexes move your foot to keep you from falling. (Without sticking your arms out like an idiot) Keep doing that to run decently fast but not sprinting, but it's real purpose (in real world ninjitsu not anime) was to be able to run for longer distances without getting tired. As you aren't having to push off from the ground. Looks stupid as hell.. but if you gotta run 30 miles straight, it does help with endurance. Real ninjas weren't fighters, they were spies, recon, and basically a secure letter delivery XD.

level 2

Truthmobiles 104 points · 9 days ago

If there was any real benefit to running like that, I'm sure marathon runners or professional athletes would have started doing this ages ago.

Continue this thread

level 2

username sarehard9099 11 points · 9 days ago

That's the biggest, steamiest pile of horseshit I ever read. No, this does not help with endurance. All types of running are just controlled falling. You won't be able to hold your arms put behind you like that for 30 miles. We run how we do for a reason.

Continue this thread

level 2

SculptorAndMarble 19 points · 9 days ago

Jesus you're dumb, running like that has 0 benefits and a ton of draw backs, including being terrible for your back. The only reason the character runs like that is it's easier to animate.

Continue this thread

level 2

Rheanar 14 points · 9 days ago

Humans run the way they do for a reason, and that reason is that it's the most efficient way. Considering how off your balance would be if you ran leaning forward, while also not moving your arms to balance your movements, I very sincerely doubt anyone would consider it practical.

And of course you are still pushing off the ground no matter how you run, you are not being pulled forward by some magical force. Gravity pulls you down, it doesn't pull you forward.

You can tell people are smiling just by the placement of their head.

level 1

XZerr0X 2 points · 9 days ago

Chest needs to be lower to the ground to be aerodynamic.
