Phil and Nick,
I just received this email from KSBY.
I have not been out to Stadium Park to check it out.
Do you know anything about it?
Thanks,
Mike

Hello,
I was wondering if you have any information on a monolith that now sits atop Pine Mountain? We heard it may have appeared within the last few days and has already gained the attention of many in the community.

Thank you,

Kathrene

Well that was quick. I walked up there last night around 7:30 PM and there were a lot of folks milling around, some that were strategizing as to how they could carry it away.

Nick,

Looks like the monolith is gone as of 5:30 am today, photo taken by a local mountain biker.

A lot of folks will be unhappy that it is gone and they didn't get to see it!

You probably need to send some of your maintenance folks up to remove the rebar from the ground.

The monolith had rivets and was spot welded by a resistance welder. My guess is some locals with access to a local metal fabrication shop were just having some fun.

Take care,

Mike

PS – I guess there is some value in the scrap metal!

I heard about it sometime around noon today. We don't know who put it there, and I haven't gone to check it out. If anybody checks it out, see if it is stable or has potential to fall over (and how heavy it is). I wonder how much you could get for scrap metal?

No knowledge of that. Time to get the bike out and do a site visit tomorrow.
