"To be sure, the balance is presumptively struck in favor of disclosure, but in eight specific, narrowly constructed instances where the governmental agency convincingly demonstrates its need, disclosure will not be ordered (Public Officers Law, section 87, subd 2). Thus, the agency does not have carte blanche to withhold any information it pleases. Rather, it is required to articulate particularized and specific justification and, if necessary, submit the requested materials to the courts for in camera inspection, to exempt its records from disclosure (see Church of Scientology of N.Y. v. State of New York, 46 NY 2d 906, 908). Only where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld" [Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 NY 2d 567, 571 (1979)]."

In another decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, it was held that:

"Exemptions are to be narrowly construed to provide maximum access, and the agency seeking to prevent disclosure carries the burden of demonstrating that the requested material falls squarely within a FOIL exemption by articulating a particularized and specific justification for denying access" [Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562, 566 (1986); see also, Farbman & Sons v. New York City, 62 NY 2d 75, 80 (1984); and Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 NY 2d 567, 571 (1979)].

As a general matter, when records are accessible under the Freedom of Information Law, it has been held that they should be made equally available to any person, regardless of one's status, interest or the intended use of the records [see Burke v. Yudelson, 368 NYS 2d 779, aff'd 51 AD 2d 673, 378 NYS 2d 165 (1976)]. Moreover, the Court of Appeals has held that:

"FOIL does not require that the party requesting records make any showing of need, good faith or legitimate purpose; while its purpose may be to shed light on government decision-making, its ambit is not confined to records actually used in the decision-making process.

(Matter of Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581.) Full disclosure by public agencies is, under FOIL, a public right and in the public interest, irrespective of the status or need of the person making the request" [Farbman v. New York City Health and Hospitals Corporation, 62 NY 2d 75, 80 (1984)].

Unless there is a basis for withholding records in accordance with the grounds for denial appearing in §87(2), the use of the records, and the status of the applicant and the intended use of the records are generally irrelevant.

Second, in my opinion, an assertion or claim of confidentiality, unless it is based upon a statute, is without legal substance. When confidentiality is conferred by a statute, an act of the State Legislature or Congress, records fall outside the scope of rights of access pursuant to §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states that an agency may withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". If there is no statute upon which an agency can rely to characterize records as "confidential" or "exempted from disclosure", the records are subject to whatever rights of access exist under the Freedom of Information Law [see Doolan v. BOCES, 48 NY 2d 341 (1979); Washington Post v. Insurance Department, supra; Gannett News Service, Inc. v. State Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse, 415 NYS 2d 780 (1979)]. As such, an assertion of confidentiality without more, would not in my view serve to enable an agency to justify withholding a record. In this instance, I am unaware of any statute that would render the information in question, including home addresses, exempted from disclosure by statute.

In short, I do not believe that the home addresses could be characterized as "confidential" or that there is any statute that would forbid an agency from disclosing the home addresses of its employees.

The foregoing is not intended to suggest that an agency must disclose its employees' home addresses. On the contrary, I believe that the home addresses may be withheld, but that there is no legal obligation to do so. Section 89(7) of the Freedom of Information Law states in relevant part that "Nothing in this article shall require the disclosure of the home address of an officer or employee, former officer or employee, or of a retiree of a public employees' retirement system..." Similarly, §87(3)(b) pertains to a requirement that each agency maintain a payroll record that identifies every employee by name, public office address, title and salary. The place of one's public employment is public; a home address need not be disclosed..

Third, the Freedom of Information Law is permissive. Although an agency may withhold records in accordance with the grounds for denial appearing in §87(2), the Court of Appeals has held that the agency is not obliged to do so and may choose to disclose. As stated in a unanimous decision: "...while an agency is permitted to restrict access to those records falling within the statutory exemptions, the language of the exemption provision contains permissive rather than mandatory language, and it is within the agency's discretion to disclose such records, with or without identifying details, if it so chooses" [Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY2d 562, 567 (1986)]. In Buffalo Teachers' Federation v. Board of Education [156 AD2d 1027 (1990)], it was determined that an agency had the ability to disclose the home addresses of its employees, even though it could have withheld them. Again, unless a statute forbids disclosure, an agency is not obliged to withhold records, even though it may have the authority to do so.

I point out that there are numerous situations in which home addresses are available by statute. If a person is registered to vote, voter registration records must be disclosed to any person, even though they include residents' addresses (see Election Law, §§3-220 and 5-602). Similarly, assessment rolls have long been available under the Real Property Tax Law (see §516). They include the names of owners and the location of their property, which in many instances involve peoples' names and home addresses. Section 400.00 of the Penal Law specifies that names and addresses of those licensed to possess firearms are public. In those cases, home addresses of members of the public, some of whom may be public employees, are disclosed pursuant to statute.

Having contacted the Office of Counsel at the State Education Department, the agency that licenses the employees who are the subjects of the records at issue, I was informed that the address that appears on the licenses or similar documentation is characterized as the "address of record." The address of record may be a home address, a business address or even a post office box. Consequently, the address of record may be but is not necessarily a residence address. I was also informed that the State Education Department places names of licensees on the Internet with the town and state that appears on the license in the "address of record."

In short, there are numerous opportunities for ascertaining either the residence addresses or the municipality of residence of public employees, licensees, and members of the public generally. In my opinion, those addresses could hardly be characterized as "confidential."

It has consistently been advised that licenses and similar, related kinds of records are available to the public, even though they identify particular individuals. From an historical perspective, I believe that various activities are licensed due to some public interest in ensuring that individuals or entities are qualified to engage in certain activities, such as teaching, selling real estate, owning firearms, practicing law or medicine, or engaging in the professions of the licensees to which reference was made in the materials that you forwarded. Licenses and similar records are generally available, for they are intended to enable the public to know that an individual has met appropriate requirements to be engaged in an activity that is regulated by the state or in which the state has a significant interest.

As you may be aware, §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law enables agencies to withhold records insofar as disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." That standard in my opinion is flexible and agency officials must, in some instances, make subjective judgments when issues of privacy arise. However, it is clear that not every item within a record that identifies an individual may be withheld. Disclosure of intimate details of peoples' lives, such as medical information, one's employment history and the like, might, if disclosed, constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy; nevertheless, other types of personal information maintained by an agency, particularly those types of information that are relevant to an agency's duties, would if disclosed often result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

Based on the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, it is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that those individuals are required to be more accountable than others. The courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of the official duties of a public officer or employee are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980); Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that items relating to public officers or employees are irrelevant to the performance of their official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977, dealing with membership in a union; Minerva v. Village of Valley Stream, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., May 20, 1981, involving the back of a check payable to a municipal attorney that could indicate how that person spends his/her money; Selig v. Sielaff, 200 AD 2d 298 (1994), concerning disclosure of social security numbers].

I note that it has been held that disclosure of a public employee's educational background would not constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy and must be disclosed [see Ruberti, Girvin & Ferlazzo v. NYS Division of State Police, 641 NYS 2d 411, 218 AD 2d 494 (1996)]. Additionally, in a recent judicial decision, Kwasnik v. City of New York (Supreme Court, New York County, September 26, 1997), the court quoted from and relied upon an opinion rendered by this office and held that those portions of resumes including information detailing one's public employment must be disclosed. The Committee's opinion stated that:

“If, for example, an individual must have certain types of experience, educational accomplishments or certifications as a condition precedent to serving in [a] particular position, those aspects of a resume or application would in my view be relevant to the performance of the official duties of not only the individual to whom the record pertains, but also the appointing agency or officers ... to the extent that records sought contain information pertaining to the requirements that must have been met to hold the position, they should be disclosed, for I believe that disclosure of those aspects of documents would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion [of] personal privacy. Disclosure represents the only means by which the public can be aware of whether the incumbent of the position has met the requisite criteria for serving in that position.”

Kwasnik was recently affirmed unanimously by the Appellate Division, Second Department (NYLJ, June 21, 1999).

For the reasons described in the preceding paragraphs, I believe that much of the information requested would be available as of right to any person, including an inmate. While an agency has the authority to withhold home addresses of its public employees, it is clear in my view that there is no prohibition against disclosure of those items, nor would disclosure represent a "breach of confidentiality." As suggested earlier, based on the description of the records given to you, there was no reason to believe that the records were other than public and available to any person. In that circumstance, there would ordinarily be no need for a personal review of records by you or others. Further, in my view, by responding as you did upon receipt of the additional information given to you by staff and ensuring that personal details would be deleted prior to any disclosure of the records, you acted in a manner consistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Town Clerk
Town of Wilton

Gansevoort, NY 12831-9127

Dear Ms. Murray:

I have received your letter of June 14 in which you raised a series of questions concerning access to the Town's list of building permit applications.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as you are aware, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in section 87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, a building permit application or a permit should ordinarily be disclosed, for none of the grounds for denial would apply.

Second, as a general matter, when records are accessible under the Freedom of Information Law, it has been held that they should be made equally available to any person, regardless of one's status, interest or the intended use of the records [see Burke v. Yudelson, 368 NYS 2d 779, aff'd 51 AD 2d 673, 378 NYS 2d 165 (1976)]. Moreover, the Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, has held that:

"FOIL does not require that the party requesting records make any showing of need, good faith or legitimate purpose; while its purpose may be to shed light on government decision-making, its ambit is not confined to records actually used in the decision-making process. (Matter of Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581.) Full disclosure by public agencies is, under FOIL, a public right and in the public interest, irrespective of the status or need of the person making the request" [Farbman v. New York City Health and Hospitals Corporation, 62 NY 2d 75, 80 (1984)].

The only exception to the principles described above involves one provision pertaining to the protection of personal privacy. By way of background, §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." I note that the exception pertains to items relation to natural persons, as opposed to business entities, for example. As such, if the exception is asserted, it would pertain to homeowners rather than commercial enterprises.

Pertinent is §89(2)(b), which provides a series of examples of unwarranted invasions of personal privacy, one of which pertains to:

"sale or release of lists of names and addresses if such lists would be used for commercial or fund-raising purposes" [§89(2)(b)(iii)].

The provision quoted above represents what might be viewed as an internal conflict in the law. As indicated earlier, the status of an applicant and the purposes for which a request is made are irrelevant to rights of access, and an agency cannot ordinarily inquire as to the intended use of records. However, due to the language of §89(2)(b)(iii), rights of access to a list of names and addresses, or equivalent records, may be contingent upon the purpose for which a request is made [see Scott, Sardano & Pomeranz v. Records Access Officer of Syracuse, 65 NY 2d 294, 491 NYS 2d 289 (1985); Goodstein v. Shaw, 463 NYS 2d 162 (1983)].

In a case involving a list of names and addresses in which the agency inquired as to the purpose for which the list was requested, it was found that an agency could make such an inquiry. Specifically, in Golbert v. Suffolk County Department of Consumer Affairs (Supreme Court, Suffolk County, September 5, 1980), the Court cited and apparently relied upon an opinion rendered by this office in which it was advised that an agency may appropriately require that an applicant for a list of names and addresses provide an assurance that a list of names and addresses will not be used for commercial or fund-raising purposes. In that decision, it was stated that:

"The Court agrees with petitioner's attorney that nowhere in the record does it appear that petitioner intends to use the information sought for commercial or fund-raising purposes. However, the reason for that deficiency in the record is that all efforts by respondents to receive petitioner's assurance that the information sought would not be so used apparently were unsuccessful. Without that assurance the respondents could reasonably infer that petitioner did want to use the information for commercial or fund-raising purposes."

In addition, it was held that:

"[U]nder the circumstances, the Court finds that it was not unreasonable for respondents to require petitioner to submit a certification that the information sought would not be used for commercial purposes. Petitioner has failed to establish that the respondents denial or petitioner's request for information constituted an abuse of discretion as a matter of law, and the Court declines to substitute its judgement for that of the respondents" (id.).

Hon. Shirley Murray

Based on the foregoing, if it is determined that building permit applications pertaining to homeowners are requested for commercial purposes, it appears that you could withhold their names or other identifying details. I do not believe any aspect of the records concerning commercial applicants could be withheld.

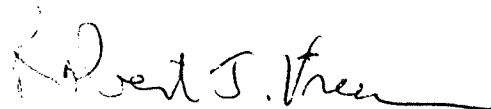

Lastly, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law is permissive. Although an agency may withhold records or portions of records in appropriate circumstances, it is not required to do so. As stated by the Court of Appeals:

"while an agency is permitted to restrict access to those records falling which the statutory exemptions, the language of the exemption provision contains permissible rather than mandatory language, and it is within the agency's discretion to disclose such records, with or without identifying details, if it so chooses" [Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562, 567 (1986)].

Therefore, while I believe that identifying details pertaining to individuals, i.e., homeowners who have submitted applications, may be withheld if a request is made for a commercial purpose, you would not be prohibited from disclosing the records in question in their entirety.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Franklin Correctional Facility
Malone, NY 12953

Dear Mr. Hernandez:

I have received your letter of June 10. You referred to an opinion rendered by this office in which it was advised that records pertaining to an internal investigation of a police officer were exempt from disclosure. You cited a decision, however, in which it was held that a judge properly ordered disclosure of records involving prior alleged acts of misconduct on the part of a police officer, because those records might have had a bearing on the officer's credibility. You have sought my views on the matter.

In this regard, as indicated in the earlier correspondence, access to the records at issue is governed by §50-a of the Civil Rights Law. In brief, that statute states that personnel records pertaining to police officers that are used to evaluate performance toward continued employment or promotion "shall be considered confidential and not subject to inspection or review without the express written consent of such police officer....except as may be mandated by lawful court order." As such, the records in question are outside the scope of rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law, for §87(2)(a) of that statute authorizes an agency to withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute."

To acquire the records in manner described in your letter and the decision to which you referred, again, there must be a court order issued in accordance with other provisions in §50-a. Those provisions state that:

"2. Prior to issuing such court order the judge must review all such requests and give interested parties the opportunity to be heard. No such order shall issue without a clear showing of facts sufficient to warrant the judge to request records for review.

3. If, after such hearing, the judge concludes there is a sufficient basis he shall sign an order requiring that the personnel records in question be sealed and sent directly to him. He shall then review the file and make a determination as to whether the records are relevant and material in the action before him. Upon such a finding the court shall make those parts of the record found to be relevant and material available to the persons so requesting.”

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Prescott:

I have received your letter of July 13 in which you appealed a denial of access to records by the Montgomery County Correctional Facility.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to determine appeals or to compel an agency to grant or deny access to records.

The provision pertaining to the right to appeal a denial is §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person thereof designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

I note that the correspondence attached to your letter indicates that your request was made pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law and the Personal Privacy Protection Law. I point out that the latter applies only to state agencies. For purposes of that statute, the term "agency" is defined to mean:

"any state board, bureau, committee, commission, council, department, public authority, public benefit corporation, division, office or any other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state of New York, except the judiciary or the state legislature or any unit of local government and shall not include offices of district attorneys" [§92(1)].

Based on the foregoing, units of local governments, such as counties, are excluded from the coverage of the Personal Privacy Protection Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Spirles:

I have received your letter of July 7, which is addressed to this agency, as well as several others. You requested a variety of materials pursuant to the federal Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not maintain possession of records generally. In short, I cannot provide the records, because this agency does not maintain them.

I note that the statutes upon which your request is based are, respectively, the federal Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts, which pertain only to federal agencies. The applicable statute in this instance is the New York Freedom of Information Law.

In view of the breadth of your request, I point out that §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. Therefore, a request should include sufficient detail to enable agency staff to locate and identify the records. It is likely that some aspects of your request may not meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Ms. Janet Axelrod
General Counsel
National Education Association of New York
217 Lark Street
Albany, NY 12210

Dear Ms. Axelrod:

I have received your letter of June 15. You have asked whether applications for charter schools submitted to a board of education, the Board of Trustees of the State University of New York (SUNY), or the Board of Regents pursuant to §2851 of the Education Law are "recoverable under FOIL."

From my perspective, with minor exceptions, the applications must be disclosed. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as you are aware, subdivision (3) of §2851 indicates that applications must be submitted to a "charter entity for approval." A "charter entity" is described in that provision to include certain boards of education, the SUNY Board of Trustees and the Board of Regents. Each of those entities in my view clearly falls within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law. That statute is applicable to agencies, and §86(3) defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Since boards of education, SUNY and the Board of Regents are governmental entities performing governmental functions for either public corporations or the State, they constitute "agencies" required to comply with the Freedom of Information Law.

Second, that statute pertains to agency records, and §86(4) defines "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, when a charter entity receives documentation from an applicant, that documentation, i.e., an application, would constitute a "record" that falls within the scope of the Freedom of Information Law. Even if documentation is characterized as preliminary or perhaps draft, as soon as it comes into the possession of an agency, it is a record subject to rights of access conferred by the Freedom of Information Law.

And third, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

It is emphasized that the courts have consistently interpreted the Freedom of Information Law in a manner that fosters maximum access. As stated by the Court of Appeals twenty years ago:

"To be sure, the balance is presumptively struck in favor of disclosure, but in eight specific, narrowly constructed instances where the governmental agency convincingly demonstrates its need, disclosure will not be ordered (Public Officers Law, section 87, subd 2). Thus, the agency does not have carte blanche to withhold any information it pleases. Rather, it is required to articulate particularized and specific justification and, if necessary, submit the requested materials to the courts for in camera inspection, to exempt its records from disclosure (see Church of Scientology of N.Y. v. State of New York, 46 NY 2d 906, 908). Only where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld" [Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 NY 2d 567, 571 (1979)]."

In another decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, it was held that:

"Exemptions are to be narrowly construed to provide maximum access, and the agency seeking to prevent disclosure carries the burden of demonstrating that the requested material falls squarely within a FOIL exemption by articulating a particularized and specific justification for denying access" [Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562, 566 (1986); see also, Farbman & Sons v. New York City, 62

NY 2d 75, 80 (1984); and Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 NY 2d 567, 571 (1979)].

Subdivision (2) of §2851 prescribes the information that must be included in an application, and in most instances, none of the grounds for denial would, in my view, be pertinent. The only aspects of the application that may contain information that might justifiably be withheld are described in paragraphs (c), (m) and potentially (x) of subdivision (2).

Paragraph (c) requires that an application include a "list of members of the initial board of trustees" and "a description of the qualifications, terms and method of appointment or election of trustees." Paragraph (m) requires the inclusion of "[i]dentification and background information on all applicants and proposed members of the board of trustees." Relevant to an analysis of rights of access is §87(2)(b), which authorizes an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." Additionally, §89(2)(b) provides a series of examples of unwarranted invasions of personal privacy.

While the status of charter schools may be somewhat unclear (i.e., as to whether they may be governmental, not-for-profit, or profit-making entities), I believe that the Legislature clearly intended that they be accountable to the public in a manner analogous to public schools that are unquestionably governmental in nature, for subdivision (1)(e) of §2854 of the Education Law specifies that charter schools shall be subject to both the Freedom of Information Law and the Open Meetings Law. As such, although there may be something of an expectation of privacy in relation to the activities of those who serve or are employed by entities that are not clearly governmental in nature, those associated with charter schools are intended to comply with the same statutes requiring accountability and disclosure as those statutes applicable to public officers and employees associated with public schools and school districts.

In my opinion, the principles expressed in judicial interpretations of the Freedom of Information Law concerning public officers and employees should generally be applicable to information identifiable to individuals named in charter school applications. Based on those decisions, it is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that those individuals are required to be more accountable than others. The courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of the official duties of a public officer or employee are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980); Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that items are irrelevant to the performance of their official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977, dealing with membership in a union; Minerva v. Village of Valley

Stream, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., May 20, 1981, involving the back of a check payable to a municipal attorney that could indicate how that person spends his/her money; Seelig v. Sielaff, 200 AD 2d 298 (1994), concerning disclosure of social security numbers].

I note that it has been held that disclosure of a public employee's educational background would not constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy and must be disclosed [see Ruberti, Girvin & Ferlazzo v. NYS Division of State Police, 641 NYS 2d 411, 218 AD 2d 494 (1996)]. Additionally, in a recent judicial decision, Kwasnik v. City of New York (Supreme Court, New York County, September 26, 1997), the court quoted from and relied upon an opinion rendered by this office and held that those portions of resumes including information detailing one's public employment must be disclosed. The Committee's opinion also stated that:

“If, for example, an individual must have certain types of experience, educational accomplishments or certifications as a condition precedent to serving in [a] particular position, those aspects of a resume or application would in my view be relevant to the performance of the official duties of not only the individual to whom the record pertains, but also the appointing agency or officers ... to the extent that records sought contain information pertaining to the requirements that must have been met to hold the position, they should be disclosed, for I believe that disclosure of those aspects of documents would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion [of] personal privacy. Disclosure represents the only means by which the public can be aware of whether the incumbent of the position has met the requisite criteria for serving in that position.”

Kwasnik was recently affirmed unanimously by the Appellate Division, Second Department (NYLJ, June 21, 1999).

In the context of a charter school application, I believe that the qualifications of members of a board of trustees, i.e., those items indicating that they have met the criteria necessary to carry out their duties, would be accessible. Similarly, reference to one's public employment or membership on a governmental body would in my view be available. In addition, it has consistently been advised that licenses and similar, related kinds of records are available to the public, even though they identify particular individuals. From an historical perspective, I believe that various activities are licensed due to some public interest in ensuring that individuals or entities are qualified to engage in certain activities, such as teaching, selling real estate, owning firearms, practicing law or medicine, or engaging in the professions of the licensees to which reference was made in the materials that you forwarded. Licenses and similar records are generally available, for they are intended to enable the public to know that an individual has met appropriate requirements to be engaged in an activity that is regulated by the state or in which the state has a significant interest.

Conversely, insofar as personal information contained in an application is not available from another governmental source (i.e., a licensing agency) or is irrelevant to the performance of one's duties, it might justifiably be withheld. Examples of items that might properly be withheld are social security numbers, home addresses, marital status, and private employment unrelated to one's duties on a board of trustees.

Paragraph (x) of §2851(2) involves the submission of "[a]ny other information relevant to the issuance of a charter required by the charter entity." While that "other information" would be presumptively available, it is possible, depending on its nature, that portions might be withheld in accordance with §87(2) of the Freedom of Information Law.

In sum, for the reasons expressed above, charter school applications are "records" that fall within the scope of the Freedom of Information Law when they come into the possession of a charter entity that must be disclosed, except to the extent that disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as discussed in the preceding commentary.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Lajoy:

I have received your letter of June 15, as well as the materials attached to it. As I understand the matter, you requested from Schenectady County an "Account Audit Trail" with a "description and reason" for expenditures in a format the same as equivalent records had been made available to you in the past. You were informed, however, that the format was changed, and you asked what new accounting system has been implemented. As of the date of your letter to this office, you had received no response to your inquiry. Further, you were not informed of the person to whom a denial of access to records may be appealed.

You have sought advice concerning the situation. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law generally pertains to existing records, and §89(3) of that statute provides in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. In short, if the County no longer maintains the information of your interest in the format in which it once maintained that information, it would not be obliged alter its new format in an effort to accommodate you.

Second, however, information equivalent to that contained in the materials previously made available to you would, in my view, be equally accessible in whatever new format might be used. The Freedom of Information Law pertains to agency records, and §86(4) of the Law defines the term "record" expansively to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced or reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations,

Mr. Marcel J. Lajoy, Esq.

memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

In view of the foregoing, equivalent information maintained in a different format or a new database would constitute a "record" that falls within the scope of the Freedom of Information Law. Further, the Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, the information sought must be disclosed, irrespective of the format in which it is maintained, for none of the grounds for denial would be applicable.

Third, pursuant to the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), which govern the procedural aspects of the Freedom of Information Law, an agency's records access officer has the duty of ensuring that agency personnel assist a requester in identifying the records sought, if necessary. In the context of the situation that you described, I believe that the records access officer, either directly or through another County official, should have informed you of the nature of the new format in order that you could make an appropriate request. In an effort to encourage that action to be taken, a copy of this response will be sent to the records access officer. In addition, it is suggested that you request a sample sheet containing information in the new format to determine the extent to which it continues to be of interest.

Lastly, the provision dealing with the right to appeal a denial of access to records is found in §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Further, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), which govern the procedural aspects of the Law, state that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation or the head, chief executive or governing body of other agencies shall hear appeals or shall designate a person or body to hear appeals regarding denial of access to records under the Freedom of Information Law.

(b) Denial of access shall be in writing stating the reason therefor and advising the person denied access of his or her right to appeal to the person or body established to hear appeals, and that person or body shall be identified by name, title, business address and business telephone number. The records access officer shall not be the appeals officer" (section 1401.7).

It is also noted that the state's highest court has held that a failure to inform a person denied access to records of the right to appeal enables that person to seek judicial review of a denial. Citing the Committee's regulations and the Freedom of Information Law, the Court of Appeals in Barrett v. Morgenthau held that:

"[i]nasmuch as the District Attorney failed to advise petitioner of the availability of an administrative appeal in the office (see, 21 NYCRR 1401.7[b]) and failed to demonstrate in the proceeding that the procedures for such an appeal had, in fact, even been established (see, Public Officers Law [section] 87[1][b], he cannot be heard to complain that petitioner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies" [74 NY 2d 907, 909 (1989)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Zulu:

I have received your letter of June 6, which reached this office on June 17. Please note that the address of the Committee is changed.

You have sought an advisory opinion concerning your ability to obtain information under the Freedom of Information Law in conjunction with 7 NYCRR §5.35(d)(4). That provision is part of the regulations promulgated by the Department of Correctional Services under the Freedom of Information Law and states that if a records access officer determines that "a record requested is in the department's custody, he shall...if agreeable to the person requesting the record, provide the information from the record rather than a copy of the record." While the meaning of the portion of the regulations to which you referred is not entirely clear, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. Section 89(3) of the Law states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. I would conjecture that there is no single record that contains each of the items in which you are interested. If that is so, the Department would not be obliged to prepare a new record on your behalf in an effort to make available the information that you are seeking.

If there is such a record, it would appear that much of the information sought would be available. In brief, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

I point out that a decision rendered in 1989 might have dealt with the kinds of records concerning transfers in which you are interested. In that case, it was stated that:

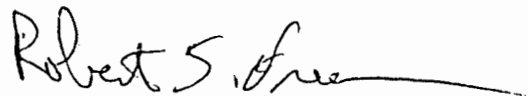

"The petitioner seeks disclosure of unredacted portions of five Program Security and Assessment Summary forms, prepared semi-annually or upon the transfer of an inmate from one facility to another, which contain information to assist the respondents in determining the placement of the inmate in the most appropriate facility. The respondents claim that these documents are exempted from disclosure under the intra-agency memorandum exemption contained in the Freedom of Information Law (Public Officers Law, section 87[2][g]). We have examined in camera unredacted copies of the documents at issue (see Matter of Nalo v. Sullivan, 125 AD 2d 311, 509 NYS 2d 53; see also Matter of Allen Group, Inc. v. New York State Dept. of Motor Vehicles, App. Div., 538 NYS 2d 78), and find that they are exempted as intra-agency material, inasmuch as they contain predecisional evaluations, recommendations and conclusions concerning the petitioner's conduct in prison (see Matter of Kheel v. Ravitch, 62 NY 2d 1, 475 NYS 2d 814, 464 NE 2d 118; Matter of Town of Oyster Bay v. Williams, 134 AD 2d 267, 520 NYS 2d 599)" [Rowland D. v. Scully, 543 NYS 2d 497, 498; 152 AD 2d 570 (1989)].

Insofar as the records sought are equivalent to those described in Rowland D., it appears that they could be withheld.

Malone, NY 12953

Dear Mr. Bethea:

I have received your letter of June 13. You have sought guidance concerning your right to obtain certain records relating to your arrest under the Freedom of Information Law..

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of the records in which you are interested or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your request, relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning records prepared by police officers in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate. The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or

iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, it was determined that the agency could not claim that the records can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records. [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267 (1996)].

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source, a witness, or others interviewed in an investigation.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Mr. Michael Bethea

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the Freedom of Information Law and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Philip King
91-A-5926
Woodbourne Correctional Facility
Woodbourne, NY 12788

Dear Mr. King:

I have received your undated note and related materials which reached this office on June 17. You have sought my views concerning your requests for certain records of the New York City Police Department.

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of all of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your request, relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning "complaint follow up reports" prepared by police officers and police officers' memo books in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate.

The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;

- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87(2)(g)(i)). Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

"However, the Police Department argues that any witness statements contained in the reports, in particular, are not 'factual' because there is no assurance of the statements' accuracy and reliability. We decline to read such a reliability requirement into the phrase 'factual data', as the dissent would have us do, and conclude that a witness statement constitutes factual data insofar as it embodies a factual account of the witness's observations. Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records, as well as others that you requested.

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

Lastly, in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available.

However, in the same decision, it was also found that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

The Court in Moore also specified that an agency "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Corbett:

I have received your letter of June 10 in which you complained with respect a delay in a response to your request for records by the City of Schenectady.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Norman Roth
University Hill Realty, Ltd.
500 Westcott Street
Syracuse, NY 13210

Dear Mr. Roth:

I have received your letter of June 14, as well as the materials attached to it.

You referred to a request for records maintained by HUD and questioned its search fees and a certain redaction. In this regard, HUD, a federal agency, is subject to the federal Freedom of Information Act. This office has advisory jurisdiction concerning the New York Freedom of Information Law, and issues concerning involving HUD's compliance with the federal Act are beyond the scope of the jurisdiction or expertise of the Committee on Open Government. I do know, however, that federal agencies are empowered to assess search and review fees under the federal Act. Entities of state and local government subject to this state's Freedom of Information Law cannot ordinarily charge those kinds of fees.

Next, you referred to a request to the Division of Housing and Community Renewal sent on April 27 that had not been answered as of the date of your letter to this office. Having reviewed the request, I would conjecture that many aspects of it are inconsistent with the Freedom of Information Law.

It is emphasized that the title of the Freedom of Information Law may be somewhat misleading, for it is not a vehicle that requires the disclosure of information per se; rather, it is vehicle that requires the disclosure of existing records. Further, §89(3) of that statute provides in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request for information. Several aspects of your request would appear to involve an effort to obtain information rather than records. For instance, seeking a "total cost of land", the "average rental per room including and excluding utility services", and similar other areas of your request likely involve information that may not exist in the form of a record. In short, insofar as the information sought does not exist in the form of a record or records, the Division, in my view, would not be obliged to prepare new records on your behalf.

Lastly, when a valid request for records is made, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which an agency must respond to the request. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. Ms. Susan Dandrow

[REDACTED]

Dear Ms. Dandrow:

I have received your undated letter, which reached this office on June 21. You referred to a situation in which a person was arrested on multiple misdemeanor and felony charges, all of which were dismissed, except for a rape charge upon which the individual was convicted. The records concerning the charges that were dismissed were sealed, and you questioned what procedure should be followed in terms of disclosure when, for example, the person convicted "applies for a job and the employer...requests the paperwork" concerning the charge that resulted in a conviction.

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Pertinent to the matter is the first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), which states that an agency may withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." As you are aware, one such statute is §160.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law, which provides that when charges against an accused are dismissed in his or her favor, the records pertaining to those charges are sealed. As such, I believe that reference to the charges that were dismissed in the situation that you described, as well as portions of records relating to them, would be beyond the scope of public rights of access. On the other hand, insofar as the records relate to the charge that was sustained and for which there was a conviction, the records would be subject to rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law.

I note that another statute that may be relevant as well. Section 50-b of the Civil Rights Law prohibits the disclosure of records insofar as the identity of a victim of a sex offense would be made known.

In conjunction with the foregoing, I believe that the kinds of records to which you referred should be reviewed, as in the case of any other request made under the Freedom of Information Law, for the purpose of determining which portions may properly be withheld and which others should be disclosed. I recognize that the process of reviewing the records and making the redactions may be somewhat time consuming. Nevertheless, that kind of review would, in my opinion, be necessary to comply with law.

Lastly, it is suggested that when a request is made for records in the kind of situation that you described, you might contact the court in which the proceeding was conducted for the purpose of ascertaining which court records are accessible to the public.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Eugene Friend

Dear Mr. Friend:

I have received your letter of June 16 in which you expressed concern with respect to the manner in which the Town of Locke keeps its records. They are apparently kept in a variety of locations and it appears that the records are not filed in manner that enables Town officials or the public to locate them.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law does not deal with the maintenance or location of records. Relevant in my view is the "Local Government Records Law", Article 57-A of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law, which pertains to the management, custody, retention and disposal of records by local governments. For purposes of those provisions, §57.17(4) of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law defines "record" to mean:

"...any book, paper, map, photograph, or other information-recording device, regardless of physical form or characteristic, that is made, produced, executed, or received by any local government or officer thereof pursuant to law or in connection with the transaction of public business. Record as used herein shall not be deemed to include library materials, extra copies of documents created only for convenience of reference, and stocks of publications."

With respect to the maintenance, retention and disposal of records, §57.25 of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law states in relevant part that:

"1. It shall be the responsibility of every local officer to maintain records to adequately document the transaction of public business and the services and programs for which such officer is responsible; to retain and have custody of such records for so long as the records are needed for the conduct of the business of the office; to adequately protect such records; to cooperate with the local government's records management officer on programs for the orderly and efficient management of records including identification and management of inactive records and identification and preservation of records of enduring value; to dispose of records in accordance with legal requirements; and to pass on to his successor records needed for the continuing conduct of business of the office...

2. No local officer shall destroy, sell or otherwise dispose of any public record without the consent of the commissioner of education. The commissioner of education shall, after consultation with other state agencies and with local government officers, determine the minimum length of time that records need to be retained. Such commissioner is authorized to develop, adopt by regulation, issue and distribute to local governments retention and disposal schedules establishing minimum retention periods..."

I note that the provisions relating to the maintenance, retention and disposal of records are carried out by a unit of the State Education Department, the State Archives and Records Administration. While I am unaware of whether that agency can help you directly, it is suggested that you express your concerns to the Regional Office of the State Archives and Records Administration's Records Advisory Service. The Town of Locke is located in Region 7, and the regional office is located in Rochester and may be reached by phone at (716) 241-2827 or 2828.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Jesse J. Gwyn

[REDACTED]
[REDACTED]

Dear Mr. Gwyn:

I have received your letter of June 21 in which you sought guidance concerning the Freedom of Information Law. As I understand the matter, you requested a "vendor contract" form from the New York City Human Resources Administration, and that agency sent you "a 21 day notice of when they will respond to the request." You have asked whether the contract should be disclosed and questioned the "timeframes" applicable under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, the contract should be made available, for none of the grounds for denial would ordinarily serve to enable an agency to withhold a contract into which it has entered with a vendor.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

Mr. Jesse J. Gwyn

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

Further, in my opinion, if, as a matter of practice or policy, an agency acknowledges the receipt of requests and indicates in every instance that it will determine to grant or deny access to records within a particular period following the date of acknowledgement, such a practice or policy would be contrary to the thrust of the Freedom of Information Law. If a request is voluminous and a significant amount of time is needed to locate records and review them to determine rights of access, a delay beyond five business days, in view of those and perhaps the other kinds of factors mentioned earlier, might be reasonable. On the other hand, if a record or report is clearly public and can be found easily, there would appear to be no rational basis for delaying disclosure. In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

Enclosed, as requested, is a copy of the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Michael W. Esslie

[REDACTED]

Dear Mr. Esslie:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of June 23. You have sought an opinion concerning your right to obtain a letter pertaining to you from the Committee on Character and Fitness of Applicants for Admission to the Bar of the Appellate Division, Third Department. You expressed the belief that "FOIL may apply to this situation."

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to agency records, and §86(3) of that statute defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

As such, the Freedom of Information Law excludes the courts and court records from its coverage.

Moreover, §90(10) of the Judiciary Law deals specifically with the issue that you raised and states that:

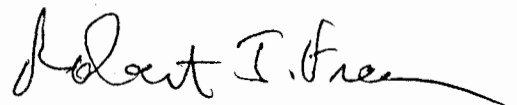

"Any statute or rule to the contrary notwithstanding, all papers, records and documents upon the application or examination of any person for admission as an attorney or counsellor at law and upon any complaint, inquiry, investigation or proceeding relating to the conduct or discipline of an attorney or attorneys, shall be sealed and be deemed private and confidential. However, upon good cause being shown, the justices of the appellate division having jurisdiction are empowered, in their discretion, by written order, to permit to be divulged all or any part of such papers, records and documents. In the discretion of the presiding or acting presiding justice of said appellate division, such order may be made without notice to the persons or attorneys to be affected thereby or upon such notice to them as he may direct. In furtherance of the purpose of this subdivision, said justices are also empowered, in their discretion, from time to time to make such rules as they may deem necessary. Without regard to the foregoing, in the event that charges are sustained by the justices of the appellate division having jurisdiction in any complaint, investigation or proceeding relating to the conduct or discipline of any attorney, the records and documents in relation thereto shall be deemed public records."

Based on the foregoing, when records are subject to §90(10) of the Judiciary Law, I believe that they may be disclosed only in conjunction with that statute, and, again, that the Freedom of Information Law would be inapplicable.

In short, the record in which you are interested would, in my view, be available only pursuant to an order issued under §90(10).

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Green Haven Correctional Facility
Drawer B
Stormville, NY 12582

Dear Mr. Torres:

I have received your undated letter, which reached this office on June 21. You have sought assistance in relation to difficulty in obtaining copies of transcripts of judicial proceedings from the office of the Oneida County District Attorney pursuant to 5 USC 552 and 552a.

In this regard, the statutes that you cited are, respectively, the federal Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts, which apply only to records maintained by federal agencies. They are inapplicable to records maintained by entities of state and local government in New York.

The New York Freedom of Information Law pertains to agency records, and §86(3) of that statute defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Mr. Emilio Torres

In view of the foregoing, the office of a district attorney constitutes an agency subject to the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law; the courts and court records, however, are not subject to that statute.

I direct your attention to Moore v. Santucci [151 AD 2d 677 (1989)], which specified that the respondent office of a district attorney "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680). If the records you are seeking are court records, it is suggested that you seek them from the clerk of the court in which the proceeding was conducted. Although the courts are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law, court records are generally available under other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255). Therefore, when seeking records from a court clerk, it is recommended that you cite an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Belot:

I have received your letter of June 20. You have alleged that the records made available to you by the Poughkeepsie Police Department are not duplicates of the original records, but rather are computer generated. You have questioned the propriety of that kind of disclosure as an alternative to providing a copy of an original document.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, I am unaware of whether the agency maintains the records of your interest in their original form. If the records exist in their original form, I believe that you would have right to obtain photocopies of those records, for it has been held that an agency must make records available in the format of an applicant's choice, if the agency has the ability to do so and the applicant pays the appropriate fee for copying [Brownstone Publishers, Inc. v. New York City Department of Buildings 550 NYS 2d 564, aff'd 166 AD 2d 294 (1990), Samuel v. Mace and Penfield Central School District, Supreme Court, Monroe County, December 18, 1991]. If the records continue to exist in their original form, and photocopies are made available, you could then seek a certification pursuant to §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law in which it is asserted that the copies are true copies of the originals.

Second, in view of the time that has passed since the creation of the records, it is possible that the originals were legally destroyed. I note in this regard that the Freedom of Information Law does not deal with the destruction of records. More relevant in my view is the "Local Government Records Law", Article 57-A of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law, which deals with the management, custody, retention and disposal of records by local governments. For purposes of those provisions, §57.17(4) of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law defines "record" to mean:

"...any book, paper, map, photograph, or other information-recording device, regardless of physical form or characteristic, that is made, produced, executed, or received by any local government or officer thereof pursuant to law or in connection with the transaction of public business. Record as used herein shall not be deemed to include library materials, extra copies of documents created only for convenience of reference, and stocks of publications."

With respect to the retention and disposal of records, §57.25 of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law states in relevant part that:

"1. It shall be the responsibility of every local officer to maintain records to adequately document the transaction of public business and the services and programs for which such officer is responsible; to retain and have custody of such records for so long as the records are needed for the conduct of the business of the office; to adequately protect such records; to cooperate with the local government's records management officer on programs for the orderly and efficient management of records including identification and management of inactive records and identification and preservation of records of enduring value; to dispose of records in accordance with legal requirements; and to pass on to his successor records needed for the continuing conduct of business of the office...

2. No local officer shall destroy, sell or otherwise dispose of any public record without the consent of the commissioner of education. The commissioner of education shall, after consultation with other state agencies and with local government officers, determine the minimum length of time that records need to be retained. Such commissioner is authorized to develop, adopt by regulation, issue and distribute to local governments retention and disposal schedules establishing minimum retention periods..."

In view of the foregoing, records cannot be destroyed without the consent of the Commissioner of Education, and local officials cannot destroy or dispose of records until the minimum period for the retention of the records has been reached. I note that the provisions relating to the retention and disposal of records are carried out by a unit of the State Education Department, the State Archives and Records Administration. That agency can provide a copy of the applicable schedule on request to enable you to ascertain the minimum time of retention of the records in question.

Lastly, even if the records must continue to be retained, there is no requirement that they be kept in their original form. Here I direct your attention to §57.29 of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law, which states that:

"Any local officer may reproduce any record in his custody by microphotography or other means that accurately and completely reproduces all the information in the record. Such official may then dispose of the original record even though it has not met the prescribed minimum legal retention period, provided that the process for reproduction and the provisions made for preserving and examining the copy meet requirements established by the commissioner of education. Such copy shall be deemed to be an original record for all purposes, including introduction as evidence in proceedings before all courts and administrative agencies."

Based on the foregoing, the disposal of the original record after it is duplicated, even in a different form, would be consistent with law.

If you remain interested in obtaining a copy of a retention schedule, you may write to the State Archives and Records Administration, Cultural Education Center, Empire State Plaza, Albany, NY 12230.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Richard W. Dunnigan
90-B-3027/9-2-58
Tappan Correctional Facility
354 Hunter Street
Ossining, NY 10562-5442

Dear Mr. Dunnigan:

I have received your letter of June 21. You have questioned the propriety of a denial of your request for records relating to the discipline of a police officer by the City of Canandaigua.

In this regard, by way of background, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §50-a of the Civil Rights Law. In brief, that statute provides that personnel records of police and correction officers that are used to evaluate performance toward continued employment or promotion are confidential. The Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, in reviewing the legislative history leading to its enactment, has held that the exemption from disclosure conferred by §50-a of the Civil Rights Law "was designed to limit access to said personnel records by criminal defense counsel, who used the contents of the records, including unsubstantiated and irrelevant complaints against officers, to embarrass officers during cross-examination" [Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY2d 562, 568 (1986)]. In another decision which dealt with unsubstantiated complaints against correction officers, the Court of Appeals held that the purpose of §50-a "was to prevent the release of sensitive personnel records that could be used in litigation for purposes of harassing or embarrassing correction officers" [Prisoners' Legal Services v. NYS Department of Correctional Services, 73 NY 2d 26, 538 NYS 2d 190, 191 (1988)]. The Court in an opinion rendered earlier this year reiterated its view of §50-a, citing that decision and stating that:

“...we recognized that the decisive factor in determining whether an officer’s personnel record was exempted from FOIL disclosure under Civil Rights Law § 50-a was the potential use of the information contained therein, not the specific purpose of the particular individual requesting access, nor whether the request was actually made in contemplation of litigation.

‘Documents pertaining to misconduct or rules violations by corrections officers – which could well be used in various ways against the officers – are the very sort of record which  was intended to be kept confidential.  The legislative purpose underlying section 50-a  was  to protect the officers from the use of records  as a means for harassment and reprisals and for the purpose of cross-examination’ (73 NY2d, at 31 [emphasis supplied])” (Daily Gazette v. City of Schenectady, 93 NY2d 145, 156- 157 (1999)).

To acquire the records in manner described in your letter, there must be a court order issued in accordance with other provisions in §50-a. Those provisions state that:

“2. Prior to issuing such court order the judge must review all such requests and give interested parties the opportunity to be heard. No such order shall issue without a clear showing of facts sufficient to warrant the judge to request records for review.

3. If, after such hearing, the judge concludes there is a sufficient basis he shall sign an order requiring that the personnel records in question be sealed and sent directly to him. He shall then review the file and make a determination as to whether the records are relevant and material in the action before him. Upon such a finding the court shall make those parts of the record found to be relevant and material available to the persons so requesting.”

Lastly, it is unclear on the basis of the materials whether the police officer that is the subject of your request continues to serve as a police officer. If that person is no longer a police officer, in view of decisions rendered by the Court of Appeals and the intent of §50-a of the Civil Rights Law, I do not believe that §50-a would apply. In that event, the Freedom of Information Law would govern rights of access.

If the Freedom of Information Law is the governing statute, final determinations reflective of findings of misconduct would in my view be available. Pertinent to an analysis of rights of access would be two of the grounds for denial.

Section 87(2)(b) permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". While the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public officers employees. It is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public officers and employees are required to be more accountable than others. With regard to records pertaining to public officers and employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a their official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, supra; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977].

The other ground for denial of significance, §87(2)(g), states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. Insofar as a request involves final agency determinations, I believe that those determinations must be disclosed, again, unless a different ground for denial could be asserted.

In terms of the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, in situations in which allegations or charges have resulted in the issuance of a written reprimand, disciplinary action, or findings that public employees have engaged in misconduct, records reflective of those kinds of determinations have been found to be available, including the names of those who are the subjects of disciplinary action [see Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); also Farrell, Geneva Printing, Scaccia and Sinicropi, supra].

In contrast, when allegations or charges of misconduct have not yet been determined or did not result in disciplinary action or a finding of misconduct, the records relating to such allegations may, in my view, be withheld, for disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Herald Company v. School District of City of Syracuse, 430 NYS 2d 460 (1980)]. Similarly, to the extent that charges are dismissed or allegations are found to be without merit, I believe that they may be withheld.

In sum, if the person who is the subject of your inquiry continues to serve as a police officer, I believe that §50-a of the Civil Rights Law would govern, and that a court order would be needed to obtain the records. If, however, he no longer serves as a police officer, the Freedom of Information Law would govern, and the records would be accessible to the extent described above.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear [REDACTED]:

I have received your letter of June 20 and the correspondence attached to it. You wrote that you were interviewed by a psychiatrist in connection with an upcoming parole hearing and asked whether a report pertaining to the interview must be disclosed.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, although the Freedom of Information Law provides broad right of access, the first ground for denial, §87 (2) (a), pertains to records that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law, which generally requires that clinical records pertaining to persons receiving treatment in a mental hygiene facility be kept confidential.

However, §33.16 of the Mental Hygiene Law pertains specifically to access to mental health records by the subjects of the records. Under that statute, a patient may direct a request for inspection or copies of his or her mental health records to a "facility", as that term is defined in the Mental Hygiene Law which maintains the records.

It is my understanding that mental health "satellite units" that operate within state correctional facilities are such "facilities" and are operated by the New York State Office of Mental Health. Further, I have been advised that requests by inmates for records of such "satellite units" pertaining to themselves may be directed to the Director of Sentenced Services, Bureau of Forensic Services, Office of Mental Health, 44 Holland Avenue, Albany, NY 12229. It is noted that under §33.16, there are certain limitations on rights of access.

Second, separate from statutes dealing with access to records are the regulations promulgated by the Division of Parole, which state in relevant part that you may obtain "those portions of the case record which will be considered by the board or authorized hearing officer or pursuant to an administrative appeal of a final decision of the board..." [9 NYCRR §8000.5(c)(2)(i)]. Among the exceptions described in the regulations are diagnostic opinions. Diagnostic opinions may generally be withheld under §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law. As such, it is possible that elements of a psychiatric report may be withheld by the Division of Parole in accordance with the Freedom of Information Law and its regulations, but that the same information may be available to you under §33.16 of the Mental Hygiene Law. It is suggested, therefore, that you might seek records from both the Division of Parole and the Office of Mental Health.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Richard A. Brinson

Dear Mr. Brinson:

I have received your letters of June 25 and June 29, as well as a variety of materials relating to them. You have sought an opinion concerning a denial of a request by the New York City Board of Education for a "market appraisal" pertaining to a certain building in the Bronx. It is your view that the denial is "without merit because a price has already been established", and the "lease rate" would be "somewhere between the $30 the organization" that you represent has asked "and the $15 [the Board's representative] quotes for the area."

As I understand the facts, it appears that the Board's denial of your request was generally consistent with law. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, two of the grounds for denial are relevant to an analysis of rights of access.

Section 87(2)(c), as you know, permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would "impair present or imminent contract awards or collective bargaining negotiations." As it relates to the impairment of "contract awards", §87(2)(c) is, in my opinion, generally cited and applicable in two types of circumstances.

One involves a situation in which an agency is involved in the process of seeking bids or proposals concerning the purchase of goods and services. If, for example, an agency seeking bids or proposals has received a number of bids, but the deadline for their submission has not been reached, premature disclosure for the bids to another possible submitter might provide that person or firm with an unfair advantage vis a vis those who already submitted bids. Further, disclosure of the identities of bidders or the number of bidders might enable another potential bidder to tailor his bid in a manner that provides him with an unfair advantage in the bidding process. In such a situation, harm or "impairment" would likely be the result, and the records could justifiably be denied. However, after the deadline for submission of bids or proposals are available after a contract has been awarded, and that, in view of the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law, "the successful bidder had no reasonable expectation of not having its bid open to the public" [Contracting Plumbers Cooperative Restoration Corp. v. Ameruso, 105 Misc. 2d 951, 430 NYS 2d 196, 198 (1980)].

The other situation in which §87(2)(c) has successfully been asserted to withhold records pertains to real property transactions where appraisals in possession of an agency were requested prior to the consummation of a transaction. Again, when premature disclosure would have enabled the public to know the prices the agency sought, thereby potentially precluding the agency from receiving an optimal price, an agency's denial was upheld [see Murray v. Troy Urban Renewal Agency, 56 NY 2d 888 (1982)].

In both of the kinds of the situations described above, there is an inequality of knowledge. More specifically, in the bid situation, the person who seeks bids prior to the deadline for their submission is presumably unaware of the content of the bids that have already been submitted; in the appraisal situation, the person seeking that record is unfamiliar with its contents. As suggested above, premature disclosure of bids would enable a potential bidder to gain knowledge in a manner unfair to other bidders and possibly to the detriment of an agency and, therefore, the public. Disclosure of an appraisal would provide knowledge to the recipient that might effectively prevent an agency from engaging in an agreement that is most beneficial to taxpayers.

When there is no inequality of knowledge between or among the parties to negotiations, or if records have been shared or exchanged by the parties, it is questionable and difficult to envision how disclosure would "impair present or imminent contract awards", (see Community Board 7 of Borough of Manhattan v. Schaffer, Supreme Court, New York County, NYLJ, March 20, 1991). Further, if an agreement has been reached or a lease or contract has been signed, presumably negotiations have ended, and any impairment that might have existed prior to the consummation of an agreement would essentially have disappeared.

In the context of the situation at issue, it appears that a range in acceptable price per square foot for a lease has been established. However, the range, between fifteen and thirty dollars, is, in my view, significant. If, for example, you knew that the opinion expressed in the appraisal indicated a value of twenty-nine dollars per square foot, you probably would not accept an offer of a price substantially less than that. Similarly, if you knew that the appraiser believes that the property is worth only sixteen dollars per square foot, you might accept an offer minimally higher. The point is that you do not know what the appraisal has established as a fair market value; if that information is disclosed to you, you may gain an unfair advantage at the negotiating table. If the foregoing represents a reasonably accurate representation of the facts, I believe that §87(2)(c) is pertinent and that it enables the Board to withhold those aspects of the record in question that would enable you to know the fair market value in the view of the appraiser..

The other provision of relevance is §87(2)(g), which pertains to the authority to withhold "inter-agency or intra-agency materials." If an appraisal is prepared by or for agency officials, it could be characterized as "intra-agency material." I note, too, that the Court of Appeals has held that appraisals and other reports prepared by consultants retained by agencies may also be considered as intra-agency materials subject to the provisions of §87(2)(g) [see Xerox Corporation v. Town of Webster, 65 NY 2d 131 (1985)].

More specifically, §87(2)(g) states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

It has been held that factual information appearing in narrative form, as well as those portions appearing in numerical or tabular form, is available under §87(2)(g)(i). For instance, in Ingram v. Axelrod, the Appellate Division held that:

"Respondent, while admitting that the report contains factual data, contends that such data is so intertwined with subject analysis and opinion as to make the entire report exempt. After reviewing the report in camera and applying to it the above statutory and regulatory criteria, we find that Special Term correctly held pages 3-5 ('Chronology of Events' and 'Analysis of the Records') to be disclosable. These pages are clearly a 'collection of statements of objective information logically arranged and reflecting objective reality'. (10 NYCRR 50.2[b]). Additionally, pages 7-11 (ambulance records, list of interviews) should be disclosed as 'factual data'. They also contain factual information upon which the agency relies (Matter of Miracle Mile Assoc. v. Yudelson, 68 A2d 176, 181 not for lve to app den 48 NY2d 706). Respondents erroneously claim that an agency record necessarily is exempt if both factual data and opinion are intertwined in it; we have held that '[t]he mere fact that some of the data might be an estimate or a recommendation does not convert it into an expression of opinion' (Matter of Polansky v. Regan, 81 AD2d 102, 104; emphasis added). Regardless, in the instant situation, we find these pages to be strictly factual and thus clearly disclosable" [90 AD 2d 568, 569 (1982)].

Similarly, the Court of Appeals has specified that the contents of intra-agency materials determine the extent to which they may be available or withheld, for it was held that:

"While the reports in principle may be exempt from disclosure, on this record - which contains only the barest description of them - we cannot determine whether the documents in fact fall wholly within the scope of FOIL's exemption for 'intra-agency materials' as claimed by respondents. To the extent the reports contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law section 87[2][g][i], or other material subject to production, they should be redacted and made available to the appellant" (id. at 133).

In short, even though statistical or factual information may be "intertwined" with opinions, the statistical or factual portions, if any, as well as any policy or determinations, would be available, unless a different ground for denial [i.e., §87(2)(c)] could properly be asserted. In the context of your inquiry, if an appraisal includes reference to comparable properties and their assessed value, that kind of material would, in my view, consist of statistical or factual information.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the Freedom of Information Law and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Randy Cahill

[REDACTED]

Dear Mr. Cahill:

I have received your letter of June 20, as well as a variety of materials relating to it. As I understand the matter, you initiated a claim against New York City following flooding that damaged your property during a rainstorm that occurred in July of 1996. Following the storm and the initiation of numerous claims, reports were prepared and evidence was acquired by the Department of Environmental Protection ("DEP"), and you apparently requested those records under the Freedom of Information Law.

Having contacted Ms. Charlotte Abo-Comitini at the DEP on your behalf to learn more of the matter, I was informed that a report pertaining specifically to your property has been made available to you, but that another report and other materials prepared for the Comptroller in response to claims made following the storm have been withheld. If my understanding of the facts is accurate, it appears that a denial of access to those materials was consistent with law. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Relevant under the circumstances in my view is the first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), which pertains to the ability to withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." Because the records were prepared following the initiation of claims against the City, it appears that the records would fall within the scope of subdivisions (c) and/or (d) of §3101 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules ("CPLR").

Section §3101 pertains to disclosure in a context related to litigation, and subdivision (a) reflects the general principle that "[t]here shall be full disclosure of all matter material and necessary in the prosecution or defense of an action..." The Advisory Committee Notes pertaining to §3101 state that the intent is "to facilitate disclosure before trial of the facts bearing on a case while limiting the possibilities of abuse." The prevention of "abuse" is considered in the remaining provisions of §3101, which describe limitations on disclosure.

One of those limitations, §3101(c), states that "[t]he work product of an attorney shall not be obtainable", and §3101(d)(2) dealing with material prepared in anticipation of litigation states in relevant part that:

"materials otherwise discoverable under subdivision (a) of this section and prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial by or for another party, or by or for the other party's representative (including an attorney, consultant, surety, indemnitor, insurer or agent), may be obtained only upon a showing that the party seeking discovery has substantial need of the materials in the preparation of the case and is unable without undue hardship to obtain the substantial equivalent of the materials by other means. In ordering discovery of the materials when the required showing has been made, the court shall protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation."

Both of those provisions are intended to shield from an adversary records that would result in a strategic advantage or disadvantage, as the case may be. In a decision in which it was determined that records could justifiably be withheld as attorney work product, the "disputed documents" were "clearly work product documents which contain the opinions, reflections and thought process of partners and associates" of a law firm "which have not been communicated or shown to individuals outside of that law firm" [Estate of Johnson, 538 NYS 2d 173 (1989)]. In another decision, the ability to withhold the work product of an attorney was discussed, and it was found that:

"The attorney-client privilege requires some showing that the subject information was disclosed in a confidential communication to an attorney for the purpose of obtaining legal advice (Matter of Priest v. Hennessy, 51 N.Y.2d 62, 68-69, 431 N.Y.S.2d 511, 409 N.E.2d 983). The work-product privilege requires an attorney affidavit showing that the information was generated by an attorney for the purpose of litigation (see, Warren v. New York City Tr. Auth., 34 A.D.2d 749, 310 N.Y.S.2d 277). The burden of satisfying each element of the privilege falls on the party asserting it (Priest v. Hennessy, supra, 51 N.Y.2d at 69, 431 N.Y.S. 2d 511, 409 N.E.2d 983), and conclusory assertions will not suffice (Witt v. Triangle Steel Prods. Corp., 103

A.D.2d 742, 477 N.Y.S.2d 210)" [Coastal Oil New York, Inc. v. Peck, [184 AD 2d 241 (1992)].

The thrust of case law concerning material prepared for litigation is consistent with the preceding analysis, in that §3101(d) may properly be asserted as a means of shielding such material from an adversary.

In sum, assuming that the records in question consist of the work product of an attorney or were prepared in anticipation of litigation, the denial of your request, in my opinion, was proper.

Lastly, I note that your request was made on the basis of 5 USC §552. That provision is the federal Freedom of Information Act, which applies only to records maintained by federal agencies. The statute that deals generally with public access to records of state and local government in New York, as suggested in the body of this opinion, is the New York Freedom of Information Law. Further, while federal agencies may be required to prepare an index identifying each record that has been withheld with a justification for the withholding, there is no such requirement in the New York Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

[REDACTED]

Dear Mr. Gershon:

I have received your letter of June 25. You have asked that I confirm your understanding that "once approved to review the information" sought under the Freedom of Information Law, "you are at the same time authorized to make and receive copies." As I understand the basis of your inquiry, you requested records from a village, the request was approved, and you reviewed them. However, when you requested copies, you were informed that copies would not be made until approval to do so could be given by the village clerk, and that you would have to return on a later date to obtain copies of the records.

In this regard, §87(2) of the Freedom of Information Law states that records accessible under the Law must be made available for inspection and copying. Further, §89(3) states that an agency must make available copies of such records upon payment of the fee prescribed by law. Therefore, if a record is available for your review, there is no question but that it must also be copied upon payment of the requisite fee. In my opinion, once it is established that a record is available to the public, it is inappropriate to engage in the additional step of requiring an approval prior to making a copy of a record. Moreover, unless it would be unduly burdensome to accomplish (i.e., due the volume of material to be copied, the inability to use a photocopier immediately, etc.), I believe that an agency must make copies of accessible records on request when the applicant requests that copies be made.

As you may be aware, the Committee on Open Government has promulgated general regulations concerning the procedural implementation of the Freedom of Information Law (21 NYCRR Part 1401). One element of the regulations involves the obligation of each agency to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of "coordinating agency response to public requests for access to records." If the village clerk is the records access officer, there is no obligation that she personally approve a request to inspect or copy records; rather, her duty is "coordinate" the village's response to requests. In this instance, since the records sought were clearly public and your request was approved, again, I do not believe that the village could validly condition the preparation of copies on a second approval.

I note that §84 of the Freedom of Information Law expresses legislative intent and states in part that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." In my view, unnecessarily delaying disclosure of records is inconsistent with the intent of the law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Jerry Brixner

Dear Mr. Brixner:

I have received your letter of June 25, as well as the materials attached to it. You have raised questions concerning the status of a "working group" created by resolution of the Chili Town Board under the Open Meetings and Freedom of Information Laws. According to the Town Clerk, the working group was designated "to investigate, evaluate and make recommendations regarding further expansion of public water within the Town of Chili." She added that the working group "did not act as a 'Public Body' within the meaning of the Open Meetings Law. No quorum was required and no minutes were taken."

As I understand the matter, the working group would not be subject to the Open Meetings Law, and its designation as a "working group" rather than a "committee" would not alter its status. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

As you may be aware, the Open Meetings Law pertains to public bodies, and §102(2) defines the phrase "public body" to mean:

"...any entity for which a quorum is required in order to conduct public business and which consists of two or more members, performing a governmental function for the state or for an agency or department thereof, or for a public corporation as defined in section sixty-six of the general construction law, or committee or subcommittee or other similar body of such public body."

The last clause of the definition refers to any "committee or subcommittee or similar body of [a] public body." Based on that language and judicial decisions, when a public body, such as the Senate, the Assembly, a county legislature or a town board, creates or designates its own members to serve as a committee or subcommittee, the committee or subcommittee would constitute a public body subject to the requirements of the Open Meetings Law. Therefore, committees of legislative bodies consisting solely of their own members would have the same obligations regarding notice and openness, for example, as well as the same authority to conduct executive sessions, as the governing body [see Glens Falls Newspapers, Inc. v. Solid Waste and Recycling Committee of the Warren County Board of Supervisors, 195 AD2d 898 (1993)].

However, if an entity is advisory in nature and does not consist wholly of members of a public body, it has been held it would not constitute a public body. Judicial decisions indicate generally that ad hoc entities that include persons other than members of public bodies that have no power to take final action fall outside the scope of the Open Meetings Law. As stated in those decisions: "it has long been held that the mere giving of advice, even about governmental matters is not itself a governmental function" [Goodson-Todman Enterprises, Ltd. v. Town Board of Milan, 542 NYS 2d 373, 374, 151 AD 2d 642 (1989); Poughkeepsie Newspapers v. Mayor's Intergovernmental Task Force, 145 AD 2d 65, 67 (1989); see also New York Public Interest Research Group v. Governor's Advisory Commission, 507 NYS 2d 798, aff'd with no opinion, 135 AD 2d 1149, motion for leave to appeal denied, 71 NY 2d 964 (1988)]. In short, based on judicial determinations interpreting the Open Meetings Law, the working group would not constitute a "public body" and, as such, would be outside the coverage of the Open Meetings Law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, I believe that any records prepared or acquired by the working group would be subject to the Freedom of Information Law, which is more extensive in its coverage than the Open Meetings Law. The former pertains to agency records, and §86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" expansively to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produces or reproduced by, with or for an agency or the stat legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folder, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes of discs, rules, regulations and codes."

Since the definition includes information in any physical form produced for an agency, such as a town, again, any records prepared or acquired by the working group would in my view constitute town records that fall within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law. The extent to which any such records might exist is unknown to me.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Ms. Emily E. Maute
Law Offices of Dupee & Dupee, P.C.
30 Matthews Street
P.O. Box 470
Goshen, NY 10924

Dear Ms. Maute:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of June 23, as well as the materials attached to it. You have sought my views concerning the propriety of a denial of a request for records maintained by the Division of State Police.

By way of background, you represent a client who has a claim for injuries against a physician relating to the death of a fetus carried by the client in the third trimester of her pregnancy. The incident was investigated by the Division of State Police, but the Orange County District Attorney chose not to prosecute. Your client, who has initiated a suit claiming malpractice against the physician, and the physician were represented by counsel in a civil action at the deposition of your client during which the District Attorney testified, and you enclosed a transcript of a portion of an exchange in which it was stated that "[i]t's been agreed between counsel after discussion that with respect to the various parties to this action that as far as questions pertaining to anything that was asked of or discussions with the district attorney between representatives of any of the parties, that no claim of privilege will be raised." It is your view that the stipulation quoted above and the holding in Mantica v. NYS Department of Health [679 NYS2d 469, 248 AD2d 30 (1998)] negate the ability of the Division to withhold the records at issue, which were denied on the ground that disclosure would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Ms. Emily E. Maute

As indicated in the response by the Division of State Police, one of the grounds for denial states that an agency may withhold records insofar as disclosure would result in "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" [§87(2)(b)]. Section 89(2) provides additional direction concerning the ability to protect against unwarranted invasions of personal privacy.

The decision to which you referred, Mantica, in my view reflects the principle that a person cannot invade his or her own privacy. In that case, the petitioners requested the file pertaining to the investigation of a complaint that they made in connection with care provided by a hospital to one of the petitioners. Both the Supreme Court and the Appellate Division rejected the agency's contention that there is a statutory prohibition against disclosure of patient information by a third party to the patient himself or herself, stating that "denying a patient disclosure of his or her own health care information is illogical and to condone such prohibition would be unreasonable" (id., 470). The Appellate Division found further that:

"In this case, the patient who initiated the inquiry, and was the subject of that inquiry, requested disclosure of, inter alia, materials related to his own medical history obtained by respondent during the resulting investigation. Thus, the patient's right to privacy and the confidentiality of his medical records are not of concern" (id., 471).

In terms of the Freedom of Information Law, §89(2)(c)(iii) states that, unless a different ground for denial can properly be asserted, "disclosure shall not be construed to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy...when upon presenting reasonable proof of identity a person seeks access to records pertain to him."

Based on the foregoing, I believe that the Division of State Police is required to disclose to you, representing your client as the subject of the records, any materials relating to her own medical history or otherwise pertaining her.

Second, with respect to the records not otherwise available to your client in conjunction with the preceding commentary, i.e., those pertaining to the physician, including his conduct, background and similar matters, the question, in my opinion, involves the extent to which disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of his privacy. In general, when a person is the subject of a complaint, a charge or an allegation that has not been proven, it has been advised that records relating to such complaint, charge or allegation may be withheld to protect that person's privacy. In my view, an unsubstantiated allegation may be withheld from the public so that the unproven claim does not result in detriment or unfair disadvantage to the subject of the claim.

The question, therefore, in my opinion involves the extent to which agreement between the parties in the presence of the District Attorney constitutes a waiver concerning the ability of the Division of State Police to withhold the records. Again, the agreement indicates that there would be "no claim of privilege" in relation to "questions pertaining to anything that was asked of or discussions with the district attorney between representatives of the parties."

From my perspective, the extent to which the foregoing could be construed to constitute a waiver by the physician regarding records pertaining to him is unclear. In a letter to the Division's Appeals Officer, your colleague with your firm wrote that "counsel for each of the parties has agreed that it would be appropriate, in this circumstance, to allow full disclosure of the sum and substance of each of the parties' interactions with the New York State Police via the Orange County District Attorney's Office" and that, "[t]herefore, the privileges or privacy issues that you are seeking to protect have already been waived." If that statement is accurate, I would agree that the ability of the Division to deny access in order to protect the privacy of the physician would have been eliminated. However, the language as it appears in the transcript is not as unequivocal, in my view, as your colleague's statement in the appeal.

Due to the lack of clarity of the statement in the transcript, I cannot advise with certainty as to the extent to which there has been a waiver regarding the disclosure of the records in question. If the scope of the waiver can be clearly established by the parties, such agreement would authorize disclosure of materials that might otherwise be deniable by the Division of State Police. It is suggested that you attempt to prepare such an agreement.

Lastly, notwithstanding the absence of a clear waiver, as suggested earlier, some aspects of the records would appear to pertain to your client and may be in the nature of medical information that should be disclosed. That being so, I believe that the denial of the request was overbroad. I note that the Court of Appeals has stressed that the Freedom of Information Law should be construed expansively. Most recently, in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY 2d 267 (1996)], the Court reiterated its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law, stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the Police Department contended that "complaint follow up reports" could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g), an exception separate from that cited in response to your request. The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276), and stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, stating that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Thomas B. Fish
95-A-7132
Great Meadow Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 51
Comstock, NY 12821-0051

Dear Mr. Fish:

I have received your letter of June 23 in which you sought an opinion concerning your right to obtain police complaint reports and arrest reports concerning "the arrest of an individual that stabbed another individual..."

In this regard, since I am unaware of the status of the arrest or details relating to the matter, I cannot offer specific guidance. However, as you may be aware, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, several of the grounds for denial may be pertinent.

The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), concerns records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §160.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law. If a person is arrested and charged with a crime, and the charges are later dismissed, the records relating to the event are sealed pursuant to that statute. When records are sealed, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

Assuming that the records have not been sealed, potentially relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning complaint reports by police officers in which it was held that a blanket denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate. The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

Page - 2 -

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, it was determined that the agency could not claim that the records can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records. [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267 (1996)].

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source, a witness, or others interviewed in an investigation.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

Mr. Thomas B. Fish

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the Freedom of Information Law and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ronald Logan

[REDACTED]
[REDACTED]

Dear Mr. Logan:

I have received your letter of June 24, as well as a copy of an appeal made under the Freedom of Information Law to the Office of the Chemung County District Attorney. You also referred to a variety of other correspondence concerning other requests for records copies of which were sent to this office. In relation to those materials, you questioned why you "have not heard from [this] office."

Having reviewed those items of correspondence, you merely referred to requests or appeals and asked that they be filed. There was no request for any additional service or response. Consequently, your letters were filed and no further action was taken.

In conjunction with your most recent letter, you asked that this office "investigate [a] constructive denial and respond." In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee has neither the resources nor the staff to conduct investigations, and it is not empowered to enforce the law. Moreover, in no case have you forwarded information involving the nature of records that have been requested.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, since it appears that requests for records might not have been answered, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests and appeals. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

[REDACTED]

Dear Mr. Amodeo:

I have received your letter of June 30 in which you sought an advisory opinion concerning a response to your request under the Freedom of Information Law for certain records of the City School District of Albany. Your request involved the following information pertaining to the Superintendent and Deputy Superintendents:

1. Copy of payroll records evidencing amount paid, amount of deductions for health insurance and other benefits.
2. Information on any moneys paid to the School District or directly to providers of health insurance benefits by either individual at any time during the specified period."

In response to the request, you were supplied with amounts regarding moneys paid to the District or health insurance providers by those holding the positions of your interest. However, the payroll records indicating amounts paid or deducted for health insurance and other benefits were found to be "confidential."

From my perspective, some of the information was properly withheld; other aspects of the records, however, should be disclosed. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law, in brief, is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

It is noted that there is nothing in the Freedom of Information Law that deals specifically with personnel records or personnel files. Further, the nature and content of so-called personnel files may differ from one agency to another, and from one employee to another. In any case, neither the characterization of documents as "personnel records" nor their placement in personnel files would necessarily render those documents "confidential" or deniable under the Freedom of Information Law (see Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980). On the contrary, the contents of those documents serve as the relevant factors in determining the extent to which they are available or deniable under the Freedom of Information Law.

The provision in the Freedom of Information Law of most significance concerning the information in question is, in my view, §87(2)(b). That provision permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy".

While the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public officers employees. It is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public officers and employees are required to be more accountable than others. Further, with regard to records pertaining to public officers and employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a their official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, supra; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 109 AD 2d 292 (1985) aff'd 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977].

It is noted that in Matter of Wool, the applicant requested a list of employees of a town "whose salaries were subject to deduction for union membership dues payable to Civil Service Employees Association...". In determining the issue, the Court held that:

"...the Legislature has established a scale to be used by a governmental body subject to the 'Freedom of Information Law' and to be utilized as well by the Court in reviewing the granting or denial of access to records of each governmental body. At one extreme lies records which are 'relevant or essential to the ordinary work of the agency or municipality' and in such event, regardless of their personal nature or contents, must be disclosed in toto. At the other extremity are those records which are not 'relevant or essential' - which contain personal matters wherein the right of the public to know must be delicately balanced against the right of the individual to privacy and confidentiality.

"The facts before this Court clearly are weighted in favor of individual rights. Membership or non-membership of a municipal employee in the CSEA is hardly necessary or essential to the ordinary work of a municipality. 'Public employees have the right to form, join and participate in, or to refrain from forming, joining or participating in any employee organization of their choosing.' Membership in the CSEA has no relevance to an employee's on-the-job performance or to the functioning of his or her employer."

Consequently, it was held that portions of records indicating membership in a union could be withheld as an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Based on the Wool decision, it might be contended that whether a public employee is covered by a health insurance has no relevance to the performance of that person's official duties, and that, therefore, such information may be withheld.

From my perspective, such a conclusion would be overly restrictive. In Capital Newspapers v. Burns, supra, the issue involved records reflective of the days and dates of sick leave claimed by a particular police officer. The Appellate Division, as I interpret its decision, held that those records were clearly relevant to the performance of the officer's duties, for the Court found that:

"One of the most basic obligations of any employee is to appear for work when scheduled to do so. Concurrent with this is the rights of an employee to properly use sick leave available to him or her. In the instant case, intervenor had an obligation to report for work when scheduled along with a right to use sick leave in accordance with his collective bargaining agreement. The taxpayers have an interest in such use of sick leave for economic as well as safety reasons. Thus it can hardly be said that disclosure of the dates in February 1983 when intervenor made use of sick leave would constitute an unwarranted invasion of privacy. Further, the motives of petitioners or the means by which they will report the information is not determinative since all records of government agencies are presumptively available for inspection without regard to the status, need, good faith or purpose of the applicant requesting access..." [109 AD 2d 92, 94-95 (1985)].

Perhaps more importantly, in a statement concerning the intent and utility of the Freedom of Information Law, the Court of Appeals affirmed the holding of the Appellate Division and added that:

"The Freedom of Information Law expresses this State's strong commitment to open government and public accountability and imposes a broad standard of disclosure upon the State and its agencies (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v New York City Health and Hosps.

Corp., 62 NY 2d 75, 79). The statute, enacted in furtherance of the public's vested and inherent 'right to know', affords all citizens the means to obtain information concerning the day-to-day functioning of State and local government thus providing the electorate with sufficient information 'to make intelligent, informed choices with respect to both the direction and scope of governmental activities' and with an effective tool for exposing waste, negligence and abuse on the part of government officers" (Capital Newspapers v. Burns, supra, 565-566).

Based on the foregoing, it might appropriately be contended that the need to enable the public to make informed choices and provide a mechanism for exposing waste or abuse must be balanced against the possible infringement upon the privacy of a public officer or employee. The magnitude of an invasion of privacy is conjectural and must in many instances be determined subjectively. In the context of your request, if a court found the invasion of one's privacy to be substantial, it might be determined that the interest in protecting privacy outweighs the interest in identifying employees receiving coverage. It is possible, too, that a court could find that the identities of employees receiving coverage should be disclosed, but that the cost of coverage, by named employee, thereby indicating the nature of coverage (i.e., individual as opposed to family coverage) may be withheld, and that the cost of coverage should be disclosed generically. On the other hand, in conjunction with the direction provided by the Court of Appeals in the passage quoted earlier, it might be determined that the information sought should be disclosed in its entirety in view of the public's significant interest in knowing how public monies are being expended.

In consideration of the factors that have been discussed, it is my view that a disclosure indicating that a public officer or employee is covered by a health insurance plan at public expense would not represent or reveal an intimate detail of one's life. Arguably, the record reflective of the dates of sick leave claimed by a public employee found by the courts to be available represents a more intimate or personal invasion of privacy. However, if a disclosure of the cost of coverage for a particular employee indicates which plan that person has chosen or whether his or her plan involves individual or dependent coverage, such a disclosure may potentially result in the revelation of a number of details of a person's life and an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. For instance, an indication of cost might reveal whether the coverage involves medical treatment routinely provided by a clinic, as opposed to a primary care physician; it also may indicate the nature of coverage, i.e., whether coverage is basic or includes catastrophic care. Again, the cost may also reveal whether coverage is for an employee alone or for that person's family or dependents.

Most appropriate in my opinion would be a disclosure of costs of health care coverage by category in terms of plans that are offered or available to officers or employees. However, in conjunction with the preceding commentary, I do not believe that the District would be required to disclose the type of coverage an officer or employee has chosen or which specific dependents are covered under the plan.

Other elements of the records sought reflective of benefits must in my opinion generally be disclosed. If, for example, the District pays for a life insurance policy, the use of a vehicle, a home computer or online service, home telephone, etc., those kinds of benefits, unlike the choice of health insurance coverage, would not represent a potentially intimate detail of one's life. For that reason, I believe that those kinds of details must be disclosed.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

The staff of the Committee on Open Government is authorized to issue advisory opinions. The ensuing staff advisory opinion is based solely upon the information presented in your correspondence.

Dear Mr. Rose:

I have received your letter of June 25. You have raised questions concerning access to the confidentiality of records pertaining to a juvenile.

In this regard, as a general matter the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87 (2) (a) through (i) of the Law.

Relevant in my opinion is the initial ground for denial, §87 (2) (a), which pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §784 of the Family Court Act, which states that:

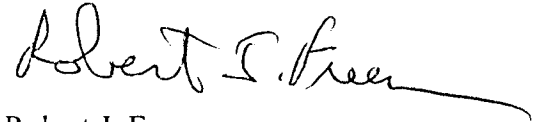

"All police records relating to the arrest and disposition of any person under this article shall be kept in files separate and apart from the arrest of adults and shall be withheld from public inspection, but such records shall be open to inspection upon good cause shown by the parent, guardian, next friend or attorney of that person upon the written order of a judge of the family court in the county in which the order was made or, if the person is subsequently convicted of a crime, of a judge of the court in which he was convicted."

Based on the foregoing, records concerning the arrest of juveniles cannot be disclosed, except pursuant to a court issued in accordance with §784 of the Family Court Act.

Dear Mr. Zarvis:

I have received your letter of June 27 in which you sought assistance form and appealed to this office in relation to your requests for medical and mental health records maintained by the Albany County Jail. Your requests were made pursuant to the federal Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts, the New York Freedom of Information Law and §18 of the Public Health Law.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the federal Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts pertain only to records maintained by federal agencies. As such, they are inapplicable to records maintained by entities of state and local government. Further, while the federal Acts include provisions involving the waiver of fees, there are no analogous provisions in the New York Freedom of Information Law. I note, too, that it has been held that an agency may charge its established fees, even when a request is made by an indigent inmate [Whitehead v. Morgenthau, 552 NYS 2d 518 (1990)].

Second, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to offer advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to determine appeals or compel an agency to grant or deny access to records. As you may be aware, the provision in the Freedom of Information Law concerning the right to appeal, §89 (4)(a), states that in relevant part that:

Mr. Paul M. Zarvis

business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Third, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

With regard to medical records, the Freedom of Information Law, in my view, likely permits that some of those records may be withheld in whole or in part, depending upon their contents. For instance, medical records prepared by Hospital personnel could be characterized as "intra-agency materials" that fall within the scope of §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law. To the extent that such materials consist of advice, opinion, recommendation and the like, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law would permit a denial.

Nevertheless, §18 of the Public Health Law generally grants rights of access to medical records to the subjects of the records. As such, that statute may provide greater access to medical records than the Freedom of Information Law. To obtain additional information concerning access to medical records and the fees that may be charged for searching and copying those records, you may write to:

Access to Patient Information Program
New York State Department of Health
Hedley Park Place
Suite 303
433 River Street
Troy, NY 12180

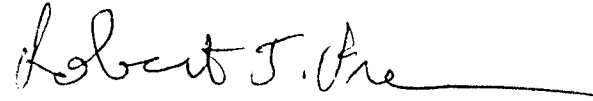

With respect to Mental Health records the first ground for denial, under the Freedom of Information Law, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law, which generally requires that clinical records pertaining to persons receiving treatment in a mental hygiene facility be kept confidential.

However, §33.16 of the Mental Hygiene Law pertains specifically to access to mental health records by the subjects of the records. Under that statute, a patient may direct a request for inspection or copies of his or her mental health records to the "facility", as that term is defined in the Mental Hygiene Law, which maintains the records. If the County Jail or the Sheriff's Department is considered the facility and maintains the records, it would be required to give effect to §33.16.

Pouch No. 1

Dear Mr. Hunt:

I have received your letter of June 17, which reached this office on June 30. You have raised a variety of issues concerning access to information.

You referred initially to what you characterized as "privacy abuses" by government agencies, credit bureaus and banks." In this regard, I note that the statute within the advisory jurisdiction of the Committee on Open Government, the Freedom of Information Law, relates to government agencies, and that §86(3) of the Law defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Based on the foregoing, banks, credit bureaus and other private entities would not be subject to the Freedom of Information Law. They may be subject to other statutes designed to deal with "privacy abuses", such as the Fair Credit Reporting Act. However, any such provisions are beyond the jurisdiction or expertise of this office.

Next, you questioned the status of e-mail under the Freedom of Information Law, particularly e-mail communications between a district attorney, witnesses and others. In my view, e-mail constitutes an agency record, for §86(4) of the Freedom of Information Law defines the term "record" to mean:

“any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form what so ever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules regulations or codes.”

In view of the language quoted above, if information is maintained in some physical form, including e-mail stored in a computer, it would constitute a “record” subject to rights of access conferred by FOIL. Further, the definition of “record” includes specific reference to computer tapes and discs, and it was held nearly twenty years ago that “[i]nformation is increasingly being stored in computers and access to such data should not be restricted merely because it is not in printed form” [Babigian v. Evans, 427 NYS 2d 688, 691 (1980); aff’d 97 AD 2d 992 (1983); see also Szikszay v. Buelow, 436 NYS 2d 558 (1981)].

When information is maintained electronically, when it is available under FOIL and may be retrieved by means of existing computer programs, an agency is required to disclose the information. In that kind of situation, the agency would merely be retrieving data that it has the capacity to retrieve. Disclosure may be accomplished either by printing out the data on paper or perhaps by duplicating the data on another storage mechanism, such as a computer tape or disk.

This is not to suggest that all e-mail communications must be disclosed. While FOIL is based on a presumption of access, it includes exceptions to rights of access. Those exceptions, as well as rights of access, are the same, irrespective of the medium in which information is stored or maintained. Stated differently, if information printed on paper would be accessible under the Freedom of Information Law, the same information would be available if it was created through e-mail. Similarly, if printed materials could be withheld, the same material recorded by means of e-mail would be equally deniable.

Lastly, you wrote that “F.O.I.L. and Civil discovery seem to overlap. In this regard I note that the courts have provided direction concerning the Freedom of Information Law as opposed to the use of discovery under the Civil Practice Law and Rules (CPLR) in civil proceedings, and discovery in criminal proceedings under the CPL. The principle is that the Freedom of Information Law is a vehicle that confers rights of access upon the public generally, while the disclosure provisions of the CPLR or the CPL, for example, are separate vehicles that may require or authorize disclosure of records due to one’s status as a litigant or defendant.

As stated by the Court of Appeals in a case involving a request made under the Freedom of Information Law by a person involved in litigation against an agency: “Access to records of a government agency under the Freedom of Information Law (FOIL) (Public Officers Law, Article 6) is not affected by the fact that there is pending or potential litigation between the person making the request and the agency” [Farbman v. NYC Health and Hospitals Corporation, 62 NY 2d 75, 78 (1984)]. Similarly, in an earlier decision, the Court of Appeals determined that “the standing of one who seeks access to records under the Freedom of Information Law is as a member of the public, and is neither enhanced...nor restricted...because he is also a litigant or potential litigant” [Matter of John

P. v. Whalen, 54 NY 2d 89, 99 (1980)]. The Court in Farbman, supra, discussed the distinction between the use of the Freedom of Information Law as opposed to the use of discovery in Article 31 of the CPLR. Specifically, it was found that:

"FOIL does not require that the party requesting records make any showing of need, good faith or legitimate purpose; while its purpose may be to shed light on governmental decision-making, its ambit is not confined to records actually used in the decision-making process (Matter of Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581.) Full disclosure by public agencies is, under FOIL, a public right and in the public interest, irrespective of the status or need of the person making the request.

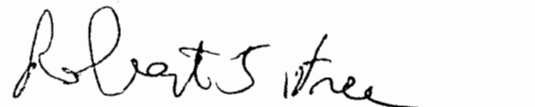

"CPLR article 31 proceeds under a different premise, and serves quite different concerns. While speaking also of 'full disclosure' article 31 is plainly more restrictive than FOIL. Access to records under CPLR depends on status and need. With goals of promoting both the ascertainment of truth at trial and the prompt disposition of actions (Allen v. Crowell-Collier Pub. Co., 21 NY 2d 403, 407), discovery is at the outset limited to that which is 'material and necessary in the prosecution or defense of an action'" [see Farbman, supra, at 80].

More recently, the Court of Appeals held that the CPL does not limit a defendant's ability to attempt to obtain records under the Freedom of Information Law [Gould v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY 2d 267 (1996)].

In sum, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law imposes a duty to disclose records, as well as the capacity to withhold them, irrespective of the status or interest of the person requesting them. To be distinguished are other provisions of law that may require disclosure based upon one's status, e.g., as a defendant, and the nature of the records or their materiality to a proceeding.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Jorge Codognotto
Wyoming Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 501
Attica, NY 10411-0501

Dear Mr. Codognotto:

I have received your letter of June 25 in which you sought assistance in obtaining records pertaining to your arrest and convictions.

In this regard, it is noted at the outset that the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and that §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. Even though other statutes may deal with access to court records, the procedural provisions associated with the Freedom of Information Law (i.e., those involving the designation of a records access officer or the right to appeal a denial) would not ordinarily be applicable. When seeking court records, it is suggested that you refer to an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

Mr. Jorge Codognotto

Both a police department and the office of a prosecutor would constitute agencies subject to the Freedom of Information Law. That statute, in general, is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of all of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your request, relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning "complaint follow up reports" prepared by police officers and police officers' memo books in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate.

The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...we note that one court has suggested that complaint follow-up reports are exempt from disclosure because they constitute nonfinal intra-agency material, irrespective of whether the information contained in the reports is 'factual data' (see, Matter of Scott v. Chief Medical Examiner, 179 AD2d 443, 444, supra citing Public Officers Law §87(2)(g)). However, under a plain reading of §87(2)(g), the exemption for intra-agency material does not apply as long as the material falls within any one of the provision's four enumerated exceptions. Thus, intra-agency documents that contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' are subject to FOIL disclosure, whether or not embodied in a final agency policy or determination (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosp. Corp., 62 NY2d 75, 83, supra; Matter of MacRae v. Dolce, 130 AD2d 577)...

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87[2][g][i]. Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

"However, the Police Department argues that any witness statements contained in the reports, in particular, are not 'factual' because there is no assurance of the statements' accuracy and reliability. We decline to read such a reliability requirement into the phrase 'factual data', as the dissent would have us do, and conclude that a witness statement constitutes factual data insofar as it embodies a factual account of the witness's observations. Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records, as well as others that you requested.

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Mr. Jorge Codognotto

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

Also relevant is the first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), which pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". One such statute, §190.25(4) of the Criminal Procedure Law deals with grand jury proceedings and provides in relevant part that:

"Grand jury proceedings are secret, and no grand juror, or other person specified in subdivision three of this section or section 215.70 of the penal law, may, except in the lawful discharge of his duties or upon written order of the court, disclose the nature or substance of any grand jury testimony, evidence, or any decision, result or other matter attending a grand jury proceeding."

As such, grand jury related records would be outside the scope of rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law. Any disclosure of those records would be based upon a court order or perhaps a vehicle authorizing or requiring disclosure that is separate and distinct from the Freedom of Information Law.

Lastly, in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available.

However, in the same decision, it was also found that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

Mr. Jorge Codognotto

The Court in Moore also specified that an agency "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

The staff of the Committee on Open Government is authorized to issue advisory opinions. The ensuing staff advisory opinion is based solely upon the information presented in your correspondence.

Dear Mr. Sherwood:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of June 30 in which you sought my opinion concerning the propriety of fees assessed by Erie County for copies of certain records.

Specifically, in response to your request for "parcel boundaries" in three towns and two villages, you wrote that the County's Real Property Director said that the fee would be three dollars per parcel. You added that:

"[You] don't know the exact parcel count for the municipalities in question but it would be safe to say it's several thousand parcels, probably around 5,000 - 7,000. This would put the cost of acquisition in the $15 - 20,000 range for just these few municipalities. To get the entire county would cost over $100,000 at least!"

From my perspective, it is unlikely that the fees assessed by the County are consistent with law. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

By way of background, until October of 1982, §87(1)(b)(iii) of the Freedom of Information Law stated that an agency could charge up to twenty-five cents per photocopy or the actual cost of reproduction unless a different fee was prescribed by "law". Chapter 73 of the Laws of 1982 replaced the word "law" with the term "statute". As described in the Committee's fourth annual report to the Governor and the Legislature of the Freedom of Information Law, which was submitted in December of 1981 and which recommended the amendment that is now law:

"The problem is that the term 'law' may include regulations, local laws, or ordinances, for example. As such, state agencies by means of regulation or municipalities by means of local law may and in some instances have established fees in excess of twenty-five cents per photocopy, thereby resulting in constructive denials of access. To remove this problem, the word 'law' should be replaced by 'statute', thereby enabling an agency to charge more than twenty-five cents only in situations in which an act of the State Legislature, a statute, so specifies."

Therefore, prior to October 15, 1982, a local law, an ordinance, or a regulation for instance, establishing a search administrative fee, a fee, excess of twenty-five cents per photocopy, or a fee higher than the actual cost of reproduction was valid. However, under the amendment, only an act of the State Legislature, a statute, would in my view permit the assessment of a fee higher than twenty-five cents per photocopy, a fee that exceeds the actual cost of reproducing records that cannot be photocopied, (i.e., electronic information), or any other fee, such as a fee for search or overhead costs. In addition, it has been confirmed judicially that fees inconsistent with the Freedom of Information Law may be validly charged only when the authority to do so is conferred by a statute [see Gandin, Schotsky & Rappaport v. Suffolk County, 640 NYS 2d 214, 226 AD 2d 339 (1996); Sheehan v. City of Syracuse, 521 NYS 2d 207 (1987)].

In a decision that focused specifically on the fee charged by a county for copying real property tax maps, it was held that the county's fee of $4.00 per map established by a committee of the county legislature was improper. In brief, the Court referred to §87(1)(b)(iii) of the Freedom of Information Law, which, again, permits an agency to charge a fee based on the actual cost of reproduction when records are larger than nine by fourteen inches or cannot be photocopied. It was also determined that the action taken by a committee of the county legislature did not constitute a statute and therefore could not be inconsistent with the Freedom of Information Law. Further, in its analysis of the actual cost, the Court found that:

"The copying expenses claimed by the County, excluding map maintenance expense, total $1.15 per tax map copy. Petitioner argues, however, that the actual cost of reproduction is $.25 per map or less. He bases his estimate on economies of scale, citing retail prices ranging from $1.40 for one map to an average of $.64 per map for a quantity of 1,138 maps (Petition, appendix, p. 1). He argues that the actual cost is much less than even the retail prices.

"Actual reproduction cost is defined in 21 NYCRR § 1401.8(c)(3) as 'average unit cost for copying a record, excluding fixed costs of the agency such as operator salaries.' I interpret this phrase to require the agency to average out the copying costs for each type of record not covered by the $.25 per page fee based on its experience over a period of time. Undoubtedly, where the number of copies per order increases for a particular record over a period of time, the economies of scale will result in a lower unit cost over that time period" [Szikszay v. Buelow, 436 NYS 2d 558, 561-562 (1981)].

In this instance, it is assumed that the records in question are maintained and can be reproduced electronically. If that is so, rather than charging on a per parcel basis, compliance with the Freedom of Information Law would involve a fee based on the actual cost of reproduction. That fee would likely be based on the cost of computer time needed to generate the data, plus the cost of information storage media, such as computer tapes or disks.

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding the Freedom of Information Law, copies of this opinion will be forwarded to the Real Property Director and the County Attorney.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Shankman:

I have received your letters of June 28 addressed to the Secretary of State and myself. As indicated above, the staff of the Committee on Open Government is authorized to respond on behalf of the Committee in relation to matters within the advisory jurisdiction of this office.

In your letter to the Secretary of State, you contended that the Public Service Commission violated the State Administrative Procedure Act. In this regard, neither the Secretary, nor the Department of State or the Committee on Open Government determines or advises with respect to the kinds allegations that you offered concerning compliance with the State Administrative Procedure Act.

You referred in the same letter to a "one-Commissioner ruling" issued on June 16 that was later confirmed by the Public Service Commission at a regularly scheduled meeting held on June 24. You wrote that no minutes were taken in relation to the earlier event and contended that "this is a violation of the Open Meetings Law." From my perspective, the Open Meetings would not have applied and, consequently, there would have been no violation. That statute pertains to meetings of public bodies, and §102(2) provides that a "public body" is, in brief, an entity consisting of two or more members that conducts public business and performs a governmental function. While the Public Service Commission is a public body required to comply with the Open Meetings Law, when a function is carried out by a single member of the Commission, there is no public body involved, and the Open Meetings Law is inapplicable.

I point out that the kind of "ruling" or "order" to which you referred is interim in nature and is authorized by §11 of the Public Service Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

“Any investigation, inquiry or hearing which the commission has power to undertake or to hold may be undertaken or held by or before the commission... All investigations, inquiries, hearings and decisions of a commissioner or specially authorized officer or employee shall be and be deemed to be the investigations, inquiries, hearings, and decisions of the commission and every order made by a commissioner, when approved and confirmed by the commission and ordered filed in its office, shall be and deemed to be the order of the commission.”

In the letter addressed to me, you referred to a determination of your appeal rendered by Chief Administrative Law Judge Judith A. Lee following a partial denial of access to records under the Freedom of Information Law. Although Judge Lee offered descriptions of the records that were withheld, you contended that you are “entitled to...either a copy of the original document redacted, or if a list is supplied, the dates of the memos and whom those memos were sent.” In this regard, under §87(2) of the Freedom of Information Law, an agency may withhold “records or portions thereof” that fall within the grounds for denial that follow. Therefore, unless a record may be withheld in its entirety, I believe that an agency would be required to disclose a copy of the record following the appropriate redactions or deletions and payment of the requisite fee for copies.

You also referred to a claim by Judge Lee that certain documents are subject to “the attorney work product privilege” and contend that you “are entitled to an Affidavit showing that the information was generated by an attorney for the purpose of litigation.” In short, there is nothing in the Freedom of Information Law that requires the preparation of such an affidavit. Further, a claim that records consist of the work product of an attorney may be asserted in my view concerning matters unrelated to litigation.

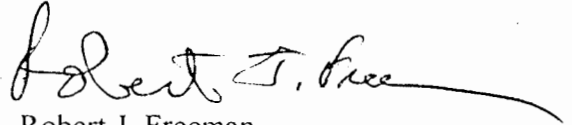

Next, you wrote that an exception to rights of access can not be based on an agency’s regulations and that only a statute can exempt records from disclosure. That issue was considered in the opinion addressed to you on May 17. I do not believe that reiterating the commentary offered then would serve any useful purpose.

Lastly, you wrote that documentation withheld was earlier “divulged by a Department employee either in a pleading or a response to a FOIL request.” In my opinion, if a disclosure made in a pleading or in response to a request made under the Freedom of Information Law was not inadvertent and was made “intelligently and voluntarily” [McGraw-Edison v. Williams, 509 NYS2d 285, 287 (1986)], an agency would have waived its right to withhold the same material sought later under the Freedom of Information Law. In Williams, among records inspected was a document that an agency believed was exempt from disclosure and should have been withheld, and the court held that an inadvertent disclosure of exempt records did not create a right of access to the records. Based on the foregoing, if indeed records may justifiably be withheld but were inadvertently made available, it appears that an agency may properly deny an ensuing request for the records.

Ms. Lillian F. Parsons

Dear Ms. Parsons:

I have received your letter of June 30 in which you sought an opinion concerning your right to gain access to a certain record.

In brief, you wrote that the nephew of a friend was recently subject of a Parole Board hearing, and that the District Attorney who prosecuted that person wrote to the Parole Board and expressed opposition to his parole. A request for the letter was made and denied "because it was inter-agency correspondence." Despite the denial of the request, however, you indicated that "[t]he District Attorney had previously issued a statement to the local newspaper saying he was writing a letter opposing his parole. The paper even had some quoted lines from the letter!"

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Second, as suggested above, a communication from a representative of one agency, the Office of the District Attorney, to another, the Parole Board, constitutes "inter-agency material." That kind of communication falls within the scope of §87 (2)(g), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;

Ms. Lillian F. Parsons

August 5, 1999

Page - 2 -

- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

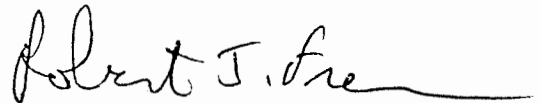

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

On the basis of §87(2)(g), insofar the District Attorney offered an opinion or recommendation to the Parole Board, I believe that the letter could be withheld.

Lastly, notwithstanding the foregoing, if any portion of the record in question was purposefully disclosed to the news media or in response to a different request made under the Freedom of Information Law, I believe that the District Attorney would effectively have waived the ability to withhold those portions of the record from the public. A disclosure to the news media, who have no special rights of access, is essentially a disclosure to the public. Consequently, in my opinion, you (or any other member of the public) would have the right to obtain the record in question to the extent that the record was disclosed to the news media.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify the understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Ms. Karen Summerlin
Asst. Vice President for Public Affairs
SUNY New Paltz
75 S. Manheim Blvd.
New Paltz, NY 12561-2499

Dear Ms. Summerlin:

I have received your letter of June 29 and appreciate your kind words.

You referred to my comments offered at the SUNY CUAD conference in which it was suggested, in your words, that you are "not required to go through all records in order to find specific documents." You related that point to "a request to view travel records of a specific individual during a period of several years" and added that "[a]lthough the records exist, they are retrievable only if I were to view and sort through all travel records made by all SUNY New Paltz employees during that period. (They are not computerized and cannot be located by name.)"

In this regard, the issue involves the extent to which the request "reasonably describes" the records sought as required by §89 (3) of the Freedom of Information Law. I point out that it has been held by the Court of Appeals that to deny a request on the ground that it fails to reasonably describe the records, an agency must establish that "the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

The Court in Konigsberg found that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth and also stated that:

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf.

Ms. Karen Summerlin

National Cable Tel. Assn. v. Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency']]' (id. At 250).

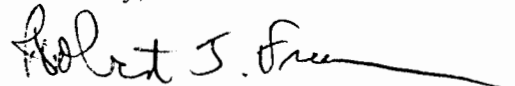

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of the agency's filing or record-keeping system. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

To the extent that records sought can be located with reasonable effort, I believe that a request would meet the requirement of reasonably describing the records. On the other hand, if the records are not maintained in a manner that permits their retrieval except by reviewing perhaps hundreds even thousands of records individually in an effort to locate those falling within the scope of the request, to that extent, the request would not in my opinion meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

In the context of the request to which you referred, if, for instance, travel records are maintained chronologically, not by name, and locating the records sought would involve a page by page review of thousands of records, you would be justified, in my opinion, to reject the request on the ground that it does not meet the requirement of "reasonably describing" the records.

I hope that I have been of assistance. Should any further questions arise, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Ms. Marjorie C. Gilligan

Dear Ms. Gilligan:

I have received your letter of July 30 in which you requested "the list of absentee voters (and their addresses) who voted at the Delaware Valley Central School, Callicoon, New York on June 10, 1999." You indicated that you were able to obtain a list of those who applied for absentee ballots, "but not the list of those who actually voted." Further, you were informed that such a list is "sealed."

In this regard, first, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning public access to government records, primarily under that state's Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not have custody or control of records generally, and it is not empowered to compel an agency to grant or deny access to records. In short, I cannot make the records available because this office does not possess them.

Second, requests for records should generally be made to the "records access officer" at the agency that you believe maintains the records of your interest. The records access officer, pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests.

And third, in brief, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Relevant in the context of your inquiry is §87 (2)(a), which pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute. One such statute is §2610 of the Education Law. Subdivision (3) of §2610 states in relevant part that:

“After the ballots are counted and the statements have been made as required herein the ballots shall be replaced in the ballot box. Each box shall be securely locked and sealed and deposited by an inspector designated for the purpose with the clerk of the board of education.”

While I am not an expert on the Education Law, I believe that the ballots remain sealed, unless there is an order to the contrary issued by the Commissioner of Education or a court.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Gouverneur, NY 13642-0370

Dear Mr. Paulk:

I have received your letter of June 29 and the correspondence attached to it. In brief, you requested a copy of an indictment pertaining to yourself from the Office of Rensselaer County Attorney. As of the date of your letter to this office, you had received no response.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Rogha:

I have received your undated letter, which reached this office on July 8. You have questioned your ability to obtain medical records pertaining to your son.

In this regard, it is noted that the governing statute is not the Freedom of Information Law but rather §18 of the Public Health Law, which deals specifically with access to patient records. In brief, that statute prohibits disclosure of medical records to all but "qualified persons." Subdivision (1)(g) of §18 defines the phrase "qualified person" to mean:

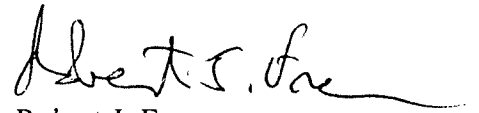

"any properly identified subject, committee for an incompetent appointed pursuant to article seventy-eight of the mental hygiene law, or a parent of an infant, a guardian of an infant appointed pursuant to article seventeen of the surrogate's court procedure act or other legally appointed guardian of an infant who may be entitled to request access to a clinical record pursuant to paragraph (c) of subdivision two of this section, or an attorney representing or acting on behalf of the subject or the subjects estate."

To obtain additional information regarding access to patient information, it is suggested that you contact Mr. Peter Farr, NYS Department of Health, Hedley Park, Suite 303, Troy, NY 12180.

Dear Mr. Mason:

I have received your letter of July 2. You have questioned the propriety of a denial of your request to the office of a district attorney to inspect grand jury minutes.

From my perspective, those records fall beyond rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Relevant to the matter is the first ground for denial in the Freedom of Information Law, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". One such statute, §190.25(4) of the Criminal Procedure Law deals with grand jury proceedings and provides in relevant part that:

"Grand jury proceedings are secret, and no grand juror, or other person specified in subdivision three of this section or section 215.70 of the penal law, may, except in the lawful discharge of his duties or upon written order of the court, disclose the nature or substance of any grand jury testimony, evidence, or any decision, result or other matter attending a grand jury proceeding."

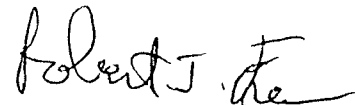

Based on the foregoing, grand jury minutes would be outside the scope of rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law. Any disclosure of those records would be based upon a court order or perhaps a vehicle authorizing or requiring disclosure that is separate and distinct from the Freedom of Information Law.

Mr. Leonard Mason
August 5, 1999

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Collins Correctional Facility
Collins, NY 14034-0340

Dear Mr. Alford:

I have received your letter of June 28 in which you sought guidance concerning your ability to obtain certain information. You wrote as follows:

- “1. How can I find out if and how much federal and/or state aid I received while I was in the care and custody of the Department of Social services of the City of New York (1990 through 1992) and my child received while he was in the care and custody of said agency (1992 through present)?
2. How can I obtain true copies of minutes to the New York State’s legislature’s debates, in regard to specific laws that I am curious to know the legal, moral and intended purposes behind them?; and
3. How can I obtain any and all statistics, reviews, and/or reports pertaining to New York State’s Department of Corrections Temporary Release Program, and New York State’s Executive Department Division of Parole?”

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records and that §89 (3) of that statute states in part that an entity is not required to create or prepare a record in response to a request. Therefore, if there are no records containing figures or tabulations indicating amounts of aid received, a social services agency would not be required to develop new records containing such figures or tabulations on your behalf. Similarly, if a debate in the Legislature was not transcribed or if there are no minutes, there would be no obligation to prepare a transcript or minutes for you.

With respect to proceedings before the Senate and the Assembly, few debates or proceedings are transcribed. However, to the extent that such records exist, they may be obtainable through your facility librarian or by writing to the records access officer in the Senate and the Assembly.

When seeking records regarding a particular law or a category of records relating to temporary release, §89 (3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. Therefore, any such request must include sufficient detail to enable staff to locate and identify the records of your interest.

Pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests. As such, a request should ordinarily be directed to the records access officer at the agency that maintains the records of your interest, i.e., at the Department of Correctional Services or the Division of Parole.

Lastly, with respect to background information regarding legislation, memoranda in support of a bill and similar documentation is generally available from the State Library. I believe that those records may be obtained with the assistance of your facility librarian.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Adam Militello
Mary Jane Books

Dear Mr. Militello:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of July 8, as well as a variety of additional correspondence relating to your efforts in gaining access to records of the State University (SUNY) at Albany.

You indicated that you frequently write to faculty members and request "their individual booklists", but that "more often than not, [y]our requests... are simply ignored." You have asked whether "faculty members [are] exempt from FOIL" and if you "can make requests directly to them."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, I believe that booklists maintained by faculty members fall within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law. That statute pertains to agency records, and §86 (4) defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, when a faculty member prepares or maintains a booklist involving materials to be used in conjunction with his or her teaching duties at SUNY, I believe that it clearly would constitute a "record" subject to the Freedom of Information Law. I note that the state's highest court has held that curricular materials used by faculty in the SUNY system are "records" falling within the scope of that statute [Russo v. Nassau County Community College, 81 NY 2d 690 (1993)].

Second, as required by §89 (1) of the Freedom of Information Law, the Committee on Open Government has promulgated general rules and regulations concerning the procedural implementation of the Freedom of Information Law (21 NYCRR Part 1401). As the regulations relate to your inquiry, §1401.2 provides in relevant part that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation and the head of an executive agency or governing body of other agencies shall be responsible for insuring compliance with the regulations herein, and shall designate one or more persons as records access officer by name or by specific job title and business address, who shall have the duty of coordinating agency response to public requests for access to records. The designation of one or more records access officers shall not be construed to prohibit officials who have in the past been authorized to make records or information available to the public from continuing to do so."

As such, SUNY has the obligation to designate "one or more persons as records access officer". Further, §1401.2(b) of the regulations describes the duties of a records access officer, including the duty to coordinate the agency's response to requests.

From my perspective, while in some instances it may be most efficient or effective to direct a request to an agency's records access officer, there is not a requirement that a member of the public do so. Based on my experience, thousands of requests for records made each year are directed to persons other than records access officers.

When a person other than the record access officer receives a request for records pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law, I believe that the recipient of the request must respond directly in a manner consistent with law, or forward the request promptly to the agency's records access officer.

Lastly, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Mr. Laszlo Polyak

Dear Mr. Polyak:

I have received your letter of July 1, as well as the materials attached to it.

The first issue that you raised involves a request for a letter from the Town of Coeymans to its attorney concerning a particular subdivision. In short, the Town Supervisor indicated that no such document exists.

In this regard, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. Further, §89 (3) of that statute states in relevant part that an agency is not required to create or prepare a record in response to a request. If, for example, information was exchanged verbally and no record was prepared, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

When an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89 (3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such certification.

A second issue relates to requests to the Town of Coeymans and the Village of Ravena for records indicating "the job duties and description" pertaining to their employees. If those records exist and are maintained by the Town or the Village, I believe they must be made available.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. While one of the grounds for denial relates to the records in question, due to its structure, it would, in my view, require disclosure.

Mr. Laszlo Polyak

Specifically, §87 (2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

A description of the duties required to be performed by the holder of a certain position would in my opinion constitute factual information available under §87 (2)(g)(i) or reflect an agency's policy in relation to the duties inherent in a position that would be available under §87 (2)(g)(iii).

If the Town or Village does not maintain the records, it is suggested that you contact the County Department of Civil Service.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Richard M. Weinberg
General Counsel & Director
The City of New York
Legal & Governmental Affairs Div.
75 Park Place, 5th Floor
New York, NY 10007

Dear Mr. Weinberg:

I have received your letters of July 1 and July 21, as well as a variety of related correspondence. In brief, you indicated that the New York City Council has responded in good faith, and in a manner consistent with law, to "numerous and duplicate" requests made under the Freedom of Information Law by Ms. Estelle Levy.

As you may be aware, I have communicated with Ms. Levy, both orally and in writing on numerous occasions. In the course of those communications, I have attempted to offer advice in accordance with the statutory charge of this office based on the terms of the Freedom of Information Law and its judicial interpretation. In an effort to assist you and to clarify the scope and utility of the Freedom of Information Law, I offer the following comments and will send this response to Ms. Levy.

First, the title of the Freedom of Information Law is somewhat misleading, for it is not a vehicle that involves the disclosure of information per se; rather, it pertains to existing records maintained by or for an agency. Further §89 (3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in relevant part that an agency is not required to create or prepare a new record in response to a request. Therefore, insofar as requests involve information that does not exist in a record or records maintained by the City Council, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

In a related vein, because the Freedom of Information Law pertains to requests for existing records rather than information, it does not require that an agency provide information by answering questions. Certainly agency officials, as public servants, frequently answer questions. However, I know of no law that generally requires that they do so. Further, that step, answering questions, goes beyond the obligations imposed upon government agencies by the Freedom of Information Law. Members of the public have been advised on many occasions that they should not seek information under the Freedom of Information Law by attempting to elicit answers to questions. On the contrary, it consistently been advised that requests involve existing records maintained by or for an agency.

Second, with respect to duplicate requests, it has been held that if records had in the past been disclosed to an individual or to his or her representative (i.e., an attorney), an agency need not make the same records available in response to an ensuing request, unless it can be demonstrated that neither the individual nor his or her representative any longer possesses the records [Moore v. Santucci, 543 NYS 2d 103, 151 AD 2d 677 (1989)].

In situations in which information is sought by asking questions, in which the information sought does not exist or is not maintained by an agency, or in which requests repeatedly seek the same records, it has been suggested that an agency refer to the principles described in preceding paragraphs and inform an individual, in writing, to indicate that, from that time forward, it will respond only to requests for existing records that have not been the subjects of previous requests.

Lastly, when a valid request is made, I note that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which an agency must respond. Specifically §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

While an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Dear Mr. Hubbard:

I have received your letter of July 8 in which you asked that I review and comment in relation to your request made under the Freedom of Information Law to the Greece Central School District.

While I believe that your requests were appropriately expressed, the overriding principle is that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and that §89 (3) of that statute provides in relevant part that an agency need not create or prepare a record in response to a request.

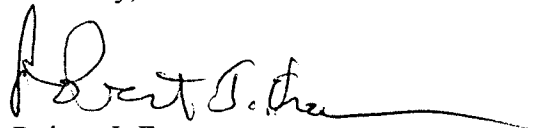

By means of example, in your first request, you referred to a statement indicating that "nearly all homeowners in Greece will see a decrease in their taxes." On the basis of that statement, you asked for records "that include or make reference to, a definition or meaning for the words 'nearly all homeowners in Greece...'" In my view, it is unlikely that the District would maintain any record that would define the phrase "nearly all." If that is so, no records falling within the request would exist, and the District would not be obliged to prepare a definition of that phrase in an effort to accommodate you. Rather than seeking a definition that is unlikely to exist, it might have been more effective to request records indicating or projecting the percentage or number of properties whose taxes might be reduced.

In short, in the future, it is suggested that you seek records that are likely to exist.

Dear Mr. Sydnor:

I have received your letter of July 5 and the document attached to it. That document is an appeal to the Office of the Orange County District Attorney concerning "the county court's denial" of a request that was apparently not answered.

I do not clearly understand the situation. If a request was made to County Court, the Freedom of Information Law would not have applied, for that statute excludes the courts from its coverage. Further, in the event of a denial of access to records by a court or a failure to respond, an appeal would not be made to the office of a district attorney. Because the Freedom of Information Law would not apply, there would be no administrative appeal analogous that involving appeals of agencies' denials of access that may be made pursuant to §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law.

If indeed you are seeking records from a court, while the Freedom of Information Law would not apply, other statutes confer broad access to court records (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255). In that event, it is suggested that you resubmit your request to the clerk of the Court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

If the request involves records maintained by the Office of the District Attorney, and that agency failed to respond, it appears that you have validly appealed. In this regard, when the Freedom of Information Law is applicable, it provides discretion concerning the time and manner in which an agency must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Lastly, insofar as the records were previously made available to you or your attorney, the District Attorney would not be required to disclose the records a second time, unless it can be demonstrated that neither you nor your attorney continues to possess the records [Moore v. Santucci, 543 NYS 2d 103, 151 AD 2d 677 (1989)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Duamutef:

I have received your letter of July 6 concerning of a denial of request directed to the Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services.

Based on your description of the request, two of the three elements of it did not involve an attempt to obtain a record. In this regard, I point out that the title of the Freedom of Information Law may be somewhat misleading, for it does not deal with information generally, but rather with records. Further, §89(3) of that statute provides in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request for information.

By means of example in the context of your request, you asked for "the way - whether by e-mail or facsimile, etc." information was "relayed" by the Department of Correctional Services to the INS. In short, as I understand the request, you sought information, an explanation of the means by which information was transmitted, rather than a record.

The remaining aspect of the request pertains to "the computer printout of this information that DOCS (Albany) has forwarded to INS in regard to [your] parole release for deportation only." If such a printout exists or can be generated, I believe that it would constitute a "record" [see §86(4)] that falls within the framework of the Freedom of Information Law.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of the record in question, if it exists, I cannot advise as to the extent to which it would be accessible under the Law.

Lastly, when a request for records is denied, the person seeking the records may appeal in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person thereof designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

For your information, the person at the Department of Correctional Services designated to determine appeals is Anthony J. Annucci, Counsel to the Department.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the Freedom of Information Law and that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Adams:

I have received your letter of July 6 in which you referred to a request made under the Freedom of Information Law to the Office of the Bronx County District Attorney nearly two years ago. It appears that the records access officer is unable to locate the records.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

Mr. Nyeem Adams

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

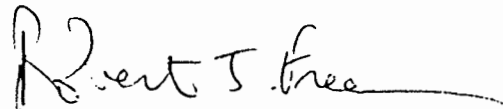

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Second, when an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

I point out that in Key v. Hynes [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search". However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when "the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made" [Thomas v. Records Access Officer, 613 NYS 2d 929, 205 AD 2d 786 (1994)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Kinney:

Your letter addressed to former Attorney General Vacco has been forwarded to the Committee on Open Government. Although you expressed the belief that the Attorney General's office offers assistance in relation to the Freedom of Information Law, this office, a unit of the Department of State, is authorized to provide guidance concerning that statute.

As I understand the matter, you requested records from the Division of State Police, some of which were made available. Other records were withheld on the grounds that disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy or identify a confidential source. You indicated that you want to pursue the matter and perhaps challenge the denial of access in court.

In this regard, although I am unfamiliar with the records at issue, I note that §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law authorizes an agency to deny access to records insofar as disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." Similarly, §87(2)(e) permits an agency to withhold records "compiled for law enforcement purposes" in certain circumstances, one of which involves situations in which disclosure would identify a confidential source or reveal confidential information relating to a criminal investigation.

Since you appealed and the appeal was denied, you may seek judicial review of the denial within four months of the agency's final determination of your appeal by initiating a proceeding under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules. That is the vehicle under which a member of the public may challenge the action of a government agency on the ground that the agency acted unreasonably or failed to carry out a duty required by law to be performed. Since you are outside of New York, I believe that an Article 78 proceeding would be brought in Supreme Court, Albany County.

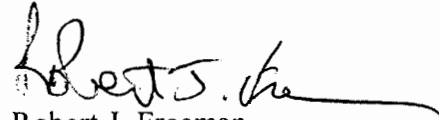

It is noted that §89(4)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law states that the agency that has denied access has the burden of proving that the records withheld fall within the exceptions to rights of access appearing in paragraphs (a) through (i) of §87(2) of the Law.

Dear Mr. Jarvis:

I have received your letter of July 13. In brief, you sought information concerning the functions of the Committee on Open Government and assistance relating to a delay in response to your request for records of the Division of Parole.

In this regard, first, the Committee on Open Government was created as part of the Freedom of Information Law and functions within the Department of State. The primary function of the Committee involves providing advice and opinions concerning rights of access to government information, primarily under the state's Freedom of Information, Open Meetings and Personal Privacy Protection Laws.

Second, with respect to the delay, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

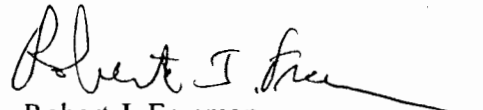

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. Dear Mr. Kinney:

I have received your letter of July 16. In brief, while you did not describe the records that you requested, you contend that the City of Auburn has engaged in delays in responding to your requests for records.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

Mr. Herbert A. Kline
Village of Port Dickinson
Village Hall
788 Chenango Street
Port Dickinson, NY 13901

Dear Mr. Kline:

I have received your letter of July 13 in which you sought guidance concerning the implementation of the Freedom of Information Law. Specifically, you raised the following question:

“...would a village clerk have access to records maintained by the police department in attempting to respond to an FOI request or should he/she request the police department to research the matter and report the results of their research to the clerk who as records access officer will then respond to the FOI request.”

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as you are aware, pursuant to §4-402 of the Village Law, the clerk is the custodian of all village records. Therefore, even though a village clerk may not have physical custody of records maintained by or for a village, he or she would have legal custody of the records.

Second, assuming that a village clerk has been designated by a board of trustees as “records access officer”, that person would have the initial authority to determine to grant or deny access to records and, in my view, the ability to acquire and view records (unless the records have been sealed) in an effort to carry out his or her duties.

By way of background, §89 (1) of the Freedom of Information Law requires the Committee on Open Government to promulgate regulations concerning the procedural implementation of that statute (21 NYCRR Part 1401). In turn, §87 (1) requires the governing body of a public corporation to adopt rules and regulations consistent those promulgated by the Committee and with the Freedom of Information Law. Further, §1401.2 of the regulations provides in relevant part that:

“(a) The governing body of a public corporation and the head of an executive agency or governing body of other agencies shall be responsible for insuring compliance with the regulations herein, and shall designate one or more persons as records access officer by name or by specific job title and business address, who shall have the duty of coordinating agency response to public requests for access officers shall not be construed to prohibit officials who have in the past been authorized to make records or information available to the public from continuing from doing so.”

Section 1401.2 (b) of the regulations describes the duties of a records access officer and states in part that:

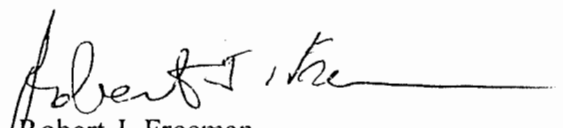

“The records access officer is responsible for assuring that agency personnel...

- (3) upon locating the records, take one of the following actions:
 - (i) make records promptly available for inspection; or
 - (ii) deny access to the records in whole or in part and explain in writing the reasons therefor.
- (4) Upon request for copies of records:
 - (i) make a copy available upon payment or offer to pay established fees, if any; or
 - (ii) permit the requester to copy those records...”

Based on the foregoing, the records access officer must "coordinate" an agency's response to requests. As part of that coordination, the records access officer may in my opinion consult with staff at the Police Department without actually reviewing records, or he or she may obtain the records for the purpose of reviewing them in an effort to determine the extent to which they must be disclosed.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Mustico:

I have received your letter of July 15 in which you asked whether requests may be made for "Freedom of Information request forms."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, I believe that written requests made pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law constitute "records" that fall within the coverage of that statute. Section 86(4) defines the term "record" expansively to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, when a written request is made to an agency, I believe that the request is itself a "record" subject to rights of access.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, with the exception of portions of certain kinds of requests, the records in question would be accessible under the law.

Mr. John P. Mustico, Esq

In my view, the only instances in which the records at issue may be withheld in part would involve situations in which, due to the nature of their contents, disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" [see Freedom of Information Law, §§87(2)(b) and 89(2)]. For instance, if a recipient of public assistance seeks records pertaining to his or her participation in a public assistance program, disclosure of the request would itself indicate that he or she has received public assistance. In that case, I believe that identifying details could be deleted to protect against an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

As stated by the Court of Appeals, the exception in the Freedom of Information Law pertaining to the protection of personal privacy involves details about one's life "that would ordinarily and reasonably be regarded as intimate, private information" [Hanig v. State Department of Motor Vehicles, 79 NY2d 106, 112 (1992)]. In most instances, a request or the correspondence pertaining to it between the agency and the applicant for records does not include intimate information about the applicant. For example, if a request is made for an agency's budget, the minutes of a meeting of a municipal board, or an agency's contract to purchase goods or services, the request typically includes nothing of an intimate nature about the applicant. Further, many requests are made by firms, associations, or persons representing business entities. In those cases, it is clear that there is nothing "personal" about the requests, for they are made by persons acting in a business or similar capacity (see e.g., American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals v. NYS Department of Agriculture and Markets, Supreme Court, Albany County, May 10, 1989; Newsday v. NYS Department of Health, Supreme Court, Albany County, October 15, 1991).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Jerry Moore

Dear Mr. Moore:

I have received your letters of July 17 and July 20 and the materials relating to them. You have raised questions concerning your efforts to inspect records of the Scotia-Glenville School District. Specifically, you wrote as follows:

“First, does the law permit Mr. Marcelle [the Superintendent] to restrict access to public records previously approved for inspection to times and dates he chooses? Second, since the noon hour may be the only time I have available to inspect public records in the future, does the law require the district to provide access to public records previously approved for inspection during the noon hour if its offices are otherwise open for conducting any of public business?”

In this regard, as you are aware, it has been advised by this office and held judicially that an agency cannot limit the ability of the public to inspect records to a period less than its regular business hours. By way of background, §89 (1)(b)(iii) of the Freedom of Information Law requires the Committee on Open Government to promulgate regulations concerning the procedural implementation of the Law (see 21 NYCRR Part 1401). In turn, §87 (1) requires agencies to adopt rules and regulations consistent with the Law and the Committee’s regulations.

Section 1401.2 of the regulations, provides in relevant part that:

“(a) The governing body of a public corporation and the head of an executive agency or governing body of other agencies shall be responsible for insuring compliance with the regulations herein, and shall designate one or more persons as records access officer by name or by specific job title and business

Mr. Jerry Moore

address, who shall have the duty of coordinating agency response to public requests for access to records. The designation of one or more records access officers shall not be construed to prohibit officials who have in the past been authorized to make records or information available to the public from continuing to do so..."

Section 1401.4 of the regulations, entitled "Hours for public inspection", states that:

"(a) Each agency shall accept requests for public access to records and produce records during all hours they are regularly open for business."

As suggested earlier, relevant to your inquiry is a decision rendered by the Appellate Division. Among the issues was the validity of a limitation regarding the time permitted to inspect records established by a Village pursuant to regulation. The Court held that the village was required to enable the public to inspect records during its regular business hours, stating in part that:

"...to the extent that Regulation 6 has been interpreted as permitting the Village Clerk to limit the hours during which public documents can be inspected to a period of time less than the business hours of the Clerk's office, it is violative of the Freedom of Information Law..."

Based on the foregoing, if the District conducts business and is open "during the noon hour", I believe that it must make records available for your inspection during that time.

I do not believe, however, that a member of the public may designate the date or dates on which he or she seeks to review records. If, for instance, records will be in use by staff on a particular date or during a particular period of time, an agency would not, in my view, be required to alter its schedule or work plan. In that instance, the agency could offer a series of dates to the person seeking to inspect the records in order that he or she could choose a date suitable to both parties.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Phil Robinson

Attica Correctional Facility
Attica, NY 14011-0149

Dear Mr. Robinson:

I have received your letter of August 2 in which you requested dental records relating to your treatment at the Harlem Valley Correctional Center.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to advise with respect to the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not have general custody or control of records. In short, I cannot provide the records, because this office does not possess them.

In the future, it is suggested that a request be directed to the agency that maintains the records of your interest. In this instance, it is possible that the records were forwarded with you to your current facility, that they may be kept at the facility where the dental work was performed, or that they have been sent to a central office at the Department of Correctional Services.

With respect to medical records, the Freedom of Information Law, in my view, likely permits that some of those records may be withheld in whole or in part, depending upon their contents. For instance, medical records prepared by Department personnel could be characterized as "intra-agency materials" that fall within the scope of §87 (2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law. To the extent that such materials consist of advice, opinion, recommendation and the like, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law would permit a denial.

However, a different statute, §18 of the Public Health Law generally grant rights of access to medical records to the subjects of the records. As such, that statute may provide greater access to medical records than the Freedom of Information Law. It is suggested that you refer to §18 of the Public Health Law in any request for medical records.

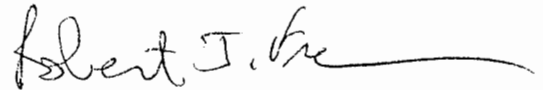

Lastly, since you referred to fee waivers under "the amended F.O.I.A.", I note that the reference involves the federal Freedom of Information Act, which applies only to records maintained by federal agencies. There are no similar provisions in the New York Freedom of Information Law, and it has been held that an agency may charge its established fees for copies, even if the applicant is an indigent inmate [see Whitehead v. Morgenthau, 552 NYS2d 518 (1990)].

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. John L. Minogue

Dear Mr. Minogue:

I have received your letter of July 13. In brief, you have complained with respect to the delay in response your request for records of the Town of North Hempstead.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests and appeals. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Marvin Datz

Dear Mr. Datz:

I have received your letter of July 13 concerning your requests for records of several agencies. In brief, recently and over the course of years, my contacts with those agencies indicate that they engage in serious efforts to comply with the Freedom of Information Law. I note, too, that the Committee on Open Government is not empowered to enforce that statute or compel an agency to grant or deny access to records.

Since one of your requests involves complaints against a police officer, I point out that such records are generally confidential.

As you may be aware, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §50-a of the Civil Rights Law. In brief, that statute provides that personnel records of police and correction officers that are used to evaluate performance toward continued employment or promotion are confidential. The Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, in reviewing the legislative history leading to its enactment, has held that §50-a exempts records from disclosure when a request is made in a context relating to litigation. More specifically, in a case brought by a newspaper, it was found that:

"Given this history, the Appellate Division correctly determined that the legislative intent underlying the enactment of Civil Rights Law section 50-a was narrowly specific, 'to prevent time-consuming and context of a civil or criminal action' (Matter of Capital Newspapers Div. of Hearst Corp. v. Burns, 109 AD 2d 92, 96). In view of the FOIL's presumption of access, our practice of construing FOIL exemptions narrowly, and this legislative history, section 50-a should not be construed to exempt intervenor's 'Lost Time Record' from disclosure by the Police Department in a non-litigation context under Public Officers section 87(2)(a)" [Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562, 569 (1986)].

It was also found that the exemption from disclosure conferred by §50-a of the Civil Rights Law "was designed to limit access to said personnel records by criminal defense counsel, who used the contents of the records, including unsubstantiated and irrelevant complaints against officers, to embarrass officers during cross-examination" (id. at 568).

In another decision which dealt with unsubstantiated complaints against correction officers, the Court of Appeals held that the purpose of §50-a "was to prevent the release of sensitive personnel records that could be used in litigation for purposes of harassing or embarrassing correction officers" [Prisoners' Legal Services v. NYS Department of Correctional Services, 73 NY 2d 26, 538 NYS 2d 190, 191 (1988)].

From my perspective, complaints against a police officer are exempt from disclosure under §50-a of the Civil Rights Law and, therefore, §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. I note, however, that records otherwise deniable may be ordered disclosed by a court insofar as they are relevant and material to an action or proceeding. Specifically, subdivisions (2) and (3) of §50-a state that:

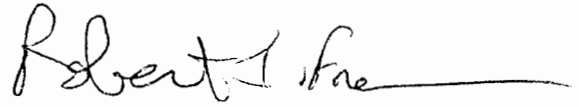

"2. Prior to issuing such court order the judge must review all such requests and give interested parties the opportunity to be heard. No such order shall issue without a clear showing of facts sufficient to warrant the judge to request records for review.

3. If, after such hearing, the judge concludes there is a sufficient basis he shall sign an order requiring that the personnel records in question be sealed and sent directly to him. He shall then review the file and make a determination as to whether the records are relevant and material in the action before him. Upon such finding the court shall make those parts of the record found to be relevant and material available to the persons so requesting."

Mr. Charles B. Smith

Dear Mr. Smith:

As you are aware, I have received a copy of a denial of a your request for records issued by the Office of the Rensselaer County Attorney. Specifically, Assistant County Attorney Stephen A. Pechenik wrote that:

“The County of Rensselaer declines your Freedom of Information Law request to review copies of any and all job applications in the possession of Rensselaer County for those employees currently holding the positions of District Attorney, Assistant District Attorney and First Assistant District Attorney under the authority of the Mtr. of New York Veteran Police Assoc., 61 N.Y. 2d 659.”

From my perspective, portions of the records sought must be disclosed in accordance with the following commentary.

First, I am mindful of the decision cited by the Assistant County Attorney. In that case, the issue involved a request for “the names and addresses of all retirees of the New York City Police Department currently receiving pensions and annuities” (id. 660), and the Court of Appeals reversed the lower court’s determination based on an amendment to the Freedom of Information Law that had recently been enacted. That provision, §89(7), states in relevant part that:

“Nothing in this article shall require the disclosure of the home address of an officer or employee, former officer or employee, or of a retiree of a public employees’ retirement system; nor shall anything in this article require the disclosure of the name or home address of a beneficiary of a public employees's retirement system or of an applicant for appointment to public employment..."

The decision quoted from the language of the amendment pertinent to records at issue and then also referred to "an application for appointment to public employment" (id., 661). The statutory language involves the name of an applicant for public employment, not an application, and it is my view, particularly in the context of the decision, that the use of the term application was a typographical error or oversight. The request and the records sought pertained to neither applicants nor applications, and the Court did not focus on those kinds of records. In short, I do not believe that the County may justifiably rely on New York Veteran Police Association as a basis for a denial of access.

Second, that is especially so in light of a decision dealing with the kinds of records that you requested that was recently unanimously affirmed by the Appellate Division, Kwasnik v. City of New York (Appellate Division, Second Department, NYLJ, June 21, 1999).

By way of background, as you are likely aware, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Relevant to the matter is §87(2)(b), which states that an agency may withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

Based on the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, it is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that those individuals are required to be more accountable than others. The courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of the official duties of a public officer or employee are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980); Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that items relating to public officers or employees are irrelevant to the performance of their official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977, dealing with membership in a union; Minerva v. Village of Valley Stream, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., May 20, 1981, involving the back of a check payable to a municipal attorney that could indicate how that person spends his/her money; Selig v. Sielaff, 200 AD 2d 298 (1994), concerning disclosure of social security numbers].

In conjunction with the foregoing, I note that it has been held by the Appellate Division, Third Department, that disclosure of a public employee's educational background would not constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy and must be disclosed [see Ruberti, Girvin & Ferlazzo v. NYS Division of State Police, 641 NYS 2d 411, 218 AD 2d 494 (1996)].

Additionally, in the lower court decision rendered in Kwasnik (Supreme Court, New York County, September 26, 1997), the court cited and relied upon an opinion rendered by this office and held that those portions of resumes, including information detailing one's public employment, must be disclosed. The Court quoted from the Committee's opinion, which stated that:

"If, for example, an individual must have certain types of experience, educational accomplishments or certifications as a condition precedent to serving in [a] particular position, those aspects of a resume or application would in my view be relevant to the performance of the official duties of not only the individual to whom the record pertains, but also the appointing agency or officers ... to the extent that records sought contain information pertaining to the requirements that must have been met to hold the position, they should be disclosed, for I believe that disclosure of those aspects of documents would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion [of] personal privacy. Disclosure represents the only means by which the public can be aware of whether the incumbent of the position has met the requisite criteria for serving in that position.

In quoting from the opinion, the court also concurred with the following:

"Although some aspects of one's employment history may be withheld, the fact of a person's public employment is a matter of public record, for records identifying public employees, their titles and salaries must be prepared and made available under the Freedom of Information Law [see §87(3)(b)]."

Items within an application for employment or a resume that may be withheld in my view would include social security numbers, marital status, home addresses, hobbies, and other details of one's life that are unrelated to the position for which he or she was hired.

In affirming the decision of the Supreme Court, the Appellate Division found that:

"This result is supported by opinions of the Committee on Open Government, to which courts should defer (see, Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181, lv denied 48 NY2d 706), favoring disclosure of public employees' resumes if only because public employment is, by dint of FOIL itself, a matter of public record (FOIL-AO-4010; FOIL-AO-7065; Public Officers Law §87[3][b]). The dates of attendance at academic institutions should also be subject to disclosure, at least where, as here, the employee did not meet the licensing requirement for employment when hired and therefore had to have worked a minimum number of years in the field in order to have qualified for the job. In such circumstances, the agency's need for the information would be great and the personal hardship of disclosure small (see, Public Officers Law §89[2][b][iv]).”

In sum, again, I believe that the details within an employment applicant application that are irrelevant to the performance of one's duties may generally be withheld. However, based on judicial decisions, those portions of such a record or its equivalent detailing one's prior public employment and other items that are matters of public record, general educational background, licenses and certifications, and items that indicate that an individual has met the requisite criteria to serve in the position must be disclosed.

In an effort to resolve the matter, a copy of this opinion will be sent to Mr. Pechenik.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Ms. Newman:

As you are aware, your letter of July 17 addressed to Daniel Degnan, Counsel to the Office for the Aging, has been forwarded to the Committee on Open Government. The Committee, a unit of the Department of State, is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law.

You have asked whether "not-for-profits and senior centers are covered by FOIL" and whether there is an obligation to disclose the Shenendehowa Senior Center's membership list. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and §86(3) of that statute defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Based on the foregoing, the Freedom of Information Law is generally applicable to entities of state and local government. Most not-for-profit corporations are not governmental in nature and, therefore, do not constitute "agencies" that fall within the coverage of that statute. Since you characterized the Shenendehowa Senior Center as "a 503 c independent not-for-profit organization", I do not believe that it would be subject to the Freedom of Information Law.

Second, even if that law applied, a membership list could, in my view, be withheld. Although the Freedom of Information Law is based on a presumption of access, it authorizes agencies to withhold records insofar as disclosure would result in "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" [§87(2)(b)]. In a variety of contexts, it has been advised that personally identifying details based on age may justifiably be withheld based on considerations of privacy. For instance, lists of senior citizens who participate in a municipality's program for the aging or lists of children who participate in a summer recreation program, indicate, by their nature, that certain people fall within particular age ranges. In those instances, since a class of persons would be identified by means of age, it has been advised that disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

It is also noted that an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy includes the "sale or release of lists of names and addresses if such lists would be used for commercial or fund-raising purposes."

I hope that I have been of assistance. Should any further questions arise, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

TO: Janon Fisher

FROM: Robert J. Freeman, Executive Director RJF

As you are aware, I have received your letter of July 19. You have sought guidance in your efforts to obtain copies of "the 911 tapes and/or internal dispatch voice communications, say between dispatcher and police and an incident or arrest report..." You have also asked for "a solid definition of when a case is considered no longer under investigation."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Second, assuming that a 911 call is made through an "enhanced" system, a so-called "E-911 system, the record of that call would be confidential. In an E-911 system, in addition to the information offered orally by the caller, the recipient of the call also receives the phone number of the instrument used to make the call and the location from which the call was made. Relevant in that circumstance is the first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), which pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §308(4) of the County Law, which states that:

"Records, in whatever form they may be kept, of calls made to a municipality's E911 system shall not be made available to or obtained by any entity or person, other than that municipality's public safety agency, another government agency or body, or a private entity or a person providing medical, ambulance or other emergency services, and shall not be utilized for any commercial purpose other than the provision of emergency services."

In my view, "records...of calls" means either a recording or a transcript of the communication between a person making a 911 emergency call, and the employee who receives the call. I do not believe that §308(4) can validly be construed to mean records regarding or relating to a 911 call. If that were so, innumerable police and fire reports, including arrest reports and police blotter entries, would be exempt from disclosure in their entirety.

Third, the calls made by a dispatcher, for example, to a police officer following the receipt of a 911 call would not be subject to the County Law, but rather to the Freedom of Information Law, as would incident and arrest reports. With respect to those records, the issue in my view does not involve defining when a case is no longer under investigation; I know of no such definition. Often records or portions of records are available by law even though an investigation is ongoing; conversely, there may be records or portions thereof that may be withheld even though an investigation has ended. In short, an analysis of public rights of access or an agency's authority to deny access to records involves the content of the records and the effects of disclosure.

Since I am unaware of the contents of the records in which you are interested or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your inquiry, relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning "complaint follow up reports" prepared by police officers and police officers' memo books in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate.

The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87(2)(g)(i)). Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

"However, the Police Department argues that any witness statements contained in the reports, in particular, are not 'factual' because there is no assurance of the statements' accuracy and reliability. We decline to read such a reliability requirement into the phrase 'factual data', as the dissent would have us do, and conclude that a witness statement constitutes factual data insofar as it embodies a factual account of the witness's observations. Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records, as well as others that you requested.

I note that in a case dealing with tapes of conversations between a dispatcher and a police officer, although the tapes constituted "intra-agency material", the court, based on their contents, found that they consisted of "instructions to staff that affect the public" that had to be disclosed [Buffalo Broadcasting Co. v. City of Buffalo, 126 AD 2d 983 (1987)]/

Also of potential significance regarding the records of your interest is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the issues and that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Madou:

I have received your letter of August 2, which reached this office on August 11, and in which you appealed denials of access to records by the Division of Parole.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to determine appeals or compel an agency to grant or deny access to records. The provision pertaining to the right to appeal, §89(4)(a), states in relevant part that:

“...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought.”

As such, an appeal following a denial of access to records is not made to or determined by the Committee on Open Government, but rather by the head of an agency or that person's designee. Only after an appeal made under §89(4)(a) is denied would an applicant have exhausted his administrative remedies and have the ability to seek judicial review of a final agency determination.

For your information, the person designated by the Division of Parole to determine appeals is Terrence X. Tracy, Counsel to the Division.

Hon. Theodore M. Fafinski
Town Supervisor
Town of Farmington
1000 County Road 8
Farmington, NY 14425

Dear Supervisor Fafinski:

I appreciate having received your determination of an appeal in which you sustained a denial of a request for the qualifications of a person who appears to have been hired as assessor by the Town of Farmington. While I would agree that some aspects of the records sought may be withheld, others, based on the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, must in my opinion be disclosed.

By way of background, as you are likely aware, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. As you suggested, relevant to the matter is §87(2)(b), which states that an agency may withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

Based on a variety of judicial decisions, it is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that those individuals are required to be more accountable than others. The courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of the official duties of a public officer or employee are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980); Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that items relating to public officers or employees are irrelevant to the performance of their official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977, dealing with membership in a union; Minerva v. Village of Valley Stream, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., May 20, 1981, involving the back of a check payable to a municipal attorney that could indicate how that person spends his/her money; Selig v. Sielaff, 200 AD 2d 298 (1994), concerning disclosure of social security numbers].

In conjunction with the foregoing, I note that it has been held by the Appellate Division, Third Department, that disclosure of a public employee's educational background would not constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy and must be disclosed [see Ruberti, Girvin & Ferlazzo v. NYS Division of State Police, 641 NYS 2d 411, 218 AD 2d 494 (1996)].

Additionally, in the lower court decision rendered in Kwasnik v. City of New York (Supreme Court, New York County, September 26, 1997), the court cited and relied upon an opinion rendered by this office and held that those portions of resumes, including information detailing one's public employment, must be disclosed. The Court quoted from the Committee's opinion, which stated that:

"If, for example, an individual must have certain types of experience, educational accomplishments or certifications as a condition precedent to serving in [a] particular position, those aspects of a resume or application would in my view be relevant to the performance of the official duties of not only the individual to whom the record pertains, but also the appointing agency or officers ... to the extent that records sought contain information pertaining to the requirements that must have been met to hold the position, they should be disclosed, for I believe that disclosure of those aspects of documents would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion [of] personal privacy. Disclosure represents the only means by which the public can be aware of whether the incumbent of the position has met the requisite criteria for serving in that position.

In quoting from the opinion, the court also concurred with the following:

"Although some aspects of one's employment history may be withheld, the fact of a person's public employment is a matter of public record, for records identifying public employees, their titles and salaries must be prepared and made available under the Freedom of Information Law [see §87(3)(b)]."

Items within an application for employment or a resume that may be withheld in my view would include social security numbers, marital status, home addresses, hobbies, and other details of one's life that are unrelated to the position for which he or she was hired.

“This result is supported by opinions of the Committee on Open Government, to which courts should defer (see, Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181, lv denied 48 NY2d 706), favoring disclosure of public employees' resumes if only because public employment is, by dint of FOIL itself, a matter of public record (FOIL-AO-4010; FOIL-AO-7065; Public Officers Law §87[3][b]). The dates of attendance at academic institutions should also be subject to disclosure, at least where, as here, the employee did not meet the licensing requirement for employment when hired and therefore had to have worked a minimum number of years in the field in order to have qualified for the job. In such circumstances, the agency's need for the information would be great and the personal hardship of disclosure small (see, Public Officers Law §89[2][b][iv])” (Appellate Division, Second Department, NYLJ, June 21, 1999).

In sum, again, I believe that the details within an employment application that are irrelevant to the performance of one's duties may generally be withheld. However, based on judicial decisions, those portions of such a record or its equivalent detailing one's prior public employment and other items that are matters of public record, general educational background, licenses and certifications, and items that indicate that an individual has met the requisite criteria to serve in the position must be disclosed.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance. If you would like to discuss the matter, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Bellamy:

I have received your letter of July 25, which reached this office on August 17. Please be advised that you used an incorrect zip code.

You have sought information concerning the outcome of a case and the day that you were released. You asked for similar information regarding an arrest that occurred in 1985.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not maintain records generally. In short, I cannot provide the information that you have requested because this agency does not possess it.

As a general matter, a request for records made under the Freedom of Information Law should be sent to the "records access officer" at the agency that maintains the records of your interest. The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests. In addition, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. Therefore, a request should include sufficient detail to enable agency staff to locate and identify the records.

Since the incidents appear to have occurred in New York City, I would conjecture that the records are maintained by the New York City Police Department, whose records access officer is Sgt. Richard Evangelista.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ericander Stevenson
94-A-2168
Orleans Correctional Facility
3531 Gaines Basin Road
Albion, NY 14411-9199

Dear Mr. Stevenson:

I have received your letter of July 15 in which you sought information concerning your ability to "retrieve documents used at trial eighteen years ago from the District Attorney's Office." You also questioned whether you may obtain "another person's criminal record."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests, and requests should ordinarily be directed to that person. I note that §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that a request "reasonably describe" the records sought. Therefore, a request should include sufficient detail to enable agency staff to locate the records.

Second, with respect to records used at trial, it was held in Moore v. Santucci [151 AD 2d 677 (1989)] that if records have been disclosed during a public proceeding, they are generally available under the Freedom of Information Law. In that decision, it was also found that an agency need not make available records that had been previously disclosed to the applicant or that person's attorney, unless there is an allegation "in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence." In my view, if you can "in evidentiary form" demonstrate that neither you nor your attorney maintains records that had previously been disclosed, the agency would be required to respond to a request for the same records.

hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680). From my perspective, some of the records that you described as having requested from the District Attorney would likely constitute court records that the agency is not required to provide.

It is likely that the court during which the proceeding was conducted would also serve as a source of the records in which you are interested. While the courts are not "agencies" subject to the Freedom of Information Law, court records are frequently available under other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255). As such, it is suggested that a request for court records be made to the clerk of the appropriate court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for such a request.

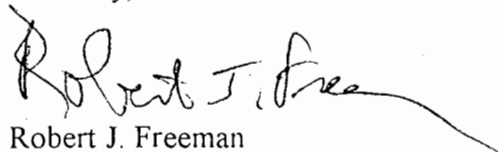

Lastly, with respect to criminal history records, the general repository of those records is the Division of Criminal Justice Services. While the subject of a criminal history record may obtain such record from the Division, it has been held that criminal history records maintained by that agency are exempted from public disclosure pursuant to §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law [Capital Newspapers v. Poklemba, Supreme Court, Albany County, April 6, 1989]. Nevertheless, if, for example, criminal conviction records were used in conjunction with a criminal proceeding by a district attorney, it has been held that the district attorney must disclose those records [see Thompson v. Weinstein, 150 AD 2d 782 (1989)].

It is noted that in a decision rendered by the Appellate Division, Second Department, the Court reconfirmed its position that criminal history records are, in general, exempt from disclosure (Woods v. Kings County District Attorney's Office, ___ AD 2d ___, NYLJ, December 31, 1996). In Woods, the Court upheld a denial of a request for the rap sheets "of numerous individuals who were not witnesses at [the petitioner's] trial." However, it distinguished its determination from the holding in Thompson, supra, in which it was found that a rap sheet must be disclosed when the request is "limited to the criminal convictions and any pending criminal actions against an individual called by the People as a witness in the petitioner's criminal trial." Therefore, insofar as a request involves records analogous to those found to be available in Thompson, I believe that a district attorney would be required to disclose.

It is also noted that while records relating to convictions may be available from the courts or other sources, when charges are dismissed in favor of an accused, records relating to arrests that did not result in convictions are generally sealed pursuant to §160.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Richard G. Tarbell

Dear Mr. Tarbell:

I have received your letters of June 18 and June 29. Please note the address of this office. As you requested, enclosed is copy of "Your Right to Know", which describes the Freedom of Information and Open Meetings Laws.

According to your initial letter, you "sent an FOI request to the City of Port Jervis, NY for the number of sexual offenders registered with the City..." The City denied the request, and you have questioned whether you have a right to the information sought.

In this regard, having conferred with officials of the Department of Law and the Division of Criminal Justice Services, I believe that rights of access are not governed by the Freedom of Information Law, but rather by the "Sex Offender Registration Act" (hereafter "the Act"), Article 6-C of the Correction Law, also known as "Megan's Law."

By way of brief background, subdivision (1) of §168-b of the Act directs the Division of Criminal Justice Services to "establish and maintain a file of individuals required to register" under the Act and includes guidelines concerning the content of what is characterized as the "registry." Subdivision (2) states that:

"The division is authorized to make the registry available to any regional or national registry of sex offenders for the purpose of sharing information. The division shall accept files from any regional or national registry of sex offenders and shall make such available when requested pursuant to the provisions of this article. The division shall require that no information included in the registry shall be made available except in the furtherance of the provisions of this article" (emphasis added).

Based on the sentence highlighted above, it is the position of both the Department of Law and the Division of Criminal Justice Services, and I concur, that information contained in the registry is to be disclosed only pursuant to the provisions of the Act, "only in the furtherance of the provisions of this article", which, again, is Article 6-C of the Correction Law.

While the Freedom of Information Law deals generally with access to records, agencies' obligations to disclose records, and their ability to deny access, according to the rules of statutory construction (see McKinney's Statutes, §32), the different or "special" statute prevails when such a statute pertains to particular records. Since information contained in the registry may be disclosed only in furtherance of the Act, the Freedom of Information Law, in my view, does not apply to that information.

Certain aspects of the contents of the registry are forwarded to local government agencies in conjunction with notification requirements imposed upon the "Board of Examiners of Sex Offenders" pursuant to §168-l of the Act. In subdivision (6) of that provision, reference is made to "three levels of notification...depending upon the degree of the risk of re-offense by the sex offender."

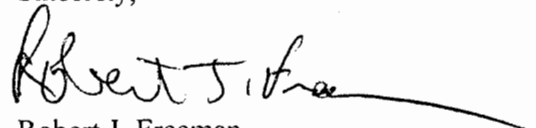

Paragraph (a) of §168-l(6) provides that "[i]f the risk of repeat offense is low, a level one designation shall be given to such sex offender." In that instance, certain law enforcement agencies are notified. Paragraph (b) states that "[i]f the risk of repeat offense is moderate, a level two designation shall be given..." Pursuant to paragraph (c), "[i]f the risk of repeat offense is high and there exists a threat to the public safety, such sex offender shall be deemed a 'sexually violent predator' and a level three designation shall be given..." In both of those instances, local law enforcement agencies are authorized to disclose various kinds of information pertaining to sex offenders. Those entities "may disclose or further disseminate such information at their discretion." As such, there appears to be no obligation to disclose or any public right of access.

It is emphasized that if an agency acquires records regarding a sex offender (or any other person convicted of a crime) from a source other than the registry, it is my view that those records are subject to the Freedom of Information Law. For example, if a police department obtained a copy of a mugshot of a person convicted of a crime independent of the requirements of the Act, such a record would be available under the Freedom of Information Law [see Planned Parenthood of Westchester, Inc. v Town Board of Town of Greenburgh, 587 NYS2d 461 (1992)].

In sum, information contained within the registry that is disseminated pursuant to the Act to a local law enforcement agency may be disclosed by the agency in its discretion. Records acquired by an agency from a source other than the registry are subject to rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

TO: Linda Towler
FROM: Robert J. Freeman, Executive Director

RJF

Dear Ms. Towler:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of July 21. In your capacity as a member of a board of education, you asked whether you may "issue a copy of a letter the acting superintendent wrote to the special education director in response to an original letter written by an ex-board member." You added that "[t]he ex-board member wrote the letter to the state and copied the current board members", and that the acting superintendent, in response, "raise[d] five allegations against the ex-board member to the state." Since the acting superintendent did not transmit a copy to the ex-board member, you asked whether you may "give the ex-board member a copy of this correspondence in order for him to answer the charges."

In this regard, while I believe that the letter could be withheld under the Freedom of Information Law, I know of no law that would preclude you from disclosing the document in question to the former board member.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, it is likely that two of the grounds for denial would authorize the school district to withhold the letter.

First, in situations in which a person is the subject of allegations or questions involving impropriety or misconduct that have not yet been determined or did not result in disciplinary action, it has been held that records relating to those allegations or questions may be withheld on the ground that disclosure would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy pursuant to §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law.

Second, a letter sent by the district to a state agency would constitute "inter-agency material" that falls within the scope of §87(2)(g). Insofar as its contents include unsubstantiated allegations, it could, in my view, be withheld under that exception as well.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law is permissive. In other words, while that statute authorizes an agency to withhold records in accordance with the grounds for denial, it has been held by the Court of Appeals that the exceptions are not mandatory, and that an agency may choose to disclose records even though the authority to withhold exists [Capital Newspapers v. Burns], 67 NY 2d 562, 567 (1986)].

Again, I am unaware of any statute that would prohibit a board member from disclosing the kind of record that you described. Further, even when information might have been obtained during an executive session properly held or from records marked "confidential", I note that the term "confidential" in my view has a narrow and precise technical meaning. For records or information to be validly characterized as confidential, I believe that such a claim must be based upon a statute that specifically confers or requires confidentiality.

For instance, if a discussion by a board of education concerns a record pertaining to a particular student (i.e., in the case of consideration of disciplinary action, an educational program, an award, etc.), the discussion would have to occur in private and the record would have to be withheld insofar as public discussion or disclosure would identify the student. As you may be aware, the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (20 USC §1232g) generally prohibits an educational agency from disclosing education records or information derived from those records that are identifiable to a student, unless the parents of the student consent to disclosure. In the context of the Open Meetings Law, a discussion concerning a student would constitute a matter made confidential by federal law and would be exempted from the coverage of that statute [see Open Meetings Law, §108(3)]. In the context of the Freedom of Information Law, an education record would be specifically exempted from disclosure by statute in accordance with §87(2)(a). In both contexts, I believe that a board of education, its members and school district employees would be prohibited from disclosing, because a statute requires confidentiality. Again, however, no statute of which I am aware would confer or require confidentiality with respect to the matter described in your correspondence.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Ms. Bryant:

I have received your letter of July 14, which reached this office on August 5. You have asked whether certain "privately-held corporations" are "exempt from New York State Freedom of Information Laws for public disclosures."

In this regard, those kinds of corporations, whether headquartered in or outside of New York, are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. That statute pertains to agency records, and §86(3) defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Based on the foregoing, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law applies to entities of state and local government; it does not apply to private corporations.

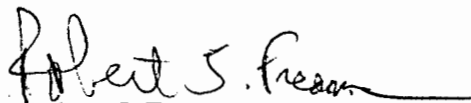

I note that the federal Freedom of Information Act applies to federal agencies. Like its state counterpart, the coverage of that statute excludes private corporations.

You also asked whether privately held corporations headquartered outside of New York are "exempt from licensing guidelines and laws." While I do not have the expertise to respond with certainty, in general, I believe that entities doing business in New York must comply with its laws.

Mr. Jim Martin

Dear Mr. Martin:

I have received your letter of July 20 and the correspondence attached to it between yourself and Mr. Robert L. Jokajtys, Director of Human Resources at Onondaga Community College. You have sought guidance concerning your efforts in obtaining information from the College. Having reviewed the correspondence, I am in partial agreement (and disagreement) with you and Mr. Jokajtys.

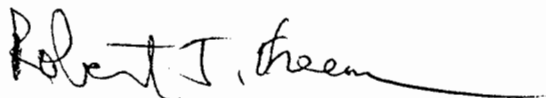

In this regard, I would agree with your contention that portions of existing records likely would include reference to an employee's academic degrees and general educational background. Insofar as that information appears within existing records, the College would not be preparing a new record; it would be disclosing portions of existing records. Further, it is reiterated that it has been held judicially that portions of records indicating one's educational background must be disclosed [Ruberti, Girvin & Ferlazzo v. Division of State Police, 218 AD2d 494 (1996)].

The other aspect of your request involves "copies of the applicable provisions and pages of the Civil Service Law and applicable rules promulgated by the Department of Civil Service which govern the creation and appointment of management confidential positions" (emphasis yours). In my view, the foregoing is not a request for records. In essence, it is a request for an interpretation of law requiring a judgment. Any number of provisions of law might be "applicable", and a disclosure of some of them, based on one's knowledge, may be incomplete due to an absence of expertise regarding the content and interpretation of each such law. Two people, even or perhaps especially two attorneys, might differ as to the applicability of a given provision of law. In contrast, if a request is made, for example, for "section 209 of the Civil Service Law", no interpretation or judgment is necessary, for sections of law appear numerically and can readily be identified. That kind of request, in my opinion, would involve a portion of a record that must be disclosed. Again, a request for laws that might be "applicable" is not, in my view, a request for a record as envisioned by the Freedom of Information Law.

Mr. Peter W. Sluys
Editor-in-Chief
Rockland County Times
14 East Central Ave.
P.O. Box 510
Pearl River, NY 10965

Dear Mr. Sluys:

I have received your letters of July 20 and August 4. Please understand that, in fairness, responses to requests for written advisory opinions are generally prepared in the order of receipt. Since this office receives nearly eight hundred requests for written opinions annually, and because the staff is small (myself and two secretarial assistants), the time for responding may be, as in this instance, approximately a month from receipt.

In brief, you described a series of difficulties in gaining access to records of the Town of Haverstraw. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

While an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records, vacation schedules, workload and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Second, it has been advised by this office and held judicially that an agency cannot limit the ability of the public to inspect records to a period less than its regular business hours. By way of background, §89 (1)(b)(iii) of the Freedom of Information Law requires the Committee on Open Government to promulgate regulations concerning the procedural implementation of the Law (see 21 NYCRR Part 1401). In turn, §87 (1) requires agencies to adopt rules and regulations consistent with the Law and the Committee's regulations.

Section 1401.2 of the regulations, provides in relevant part that:

- “(a) The governing body of a public corporation and the head of an executive agency or governing body of other agencies shall be responsible for insuring compliance with the regulations herein, and shall designate one or more persons as records access officer by name or by specific job title and business address, who shall have the duty of coordinating agency response to public requests for access to records. The designation of one or more records access officers shall not be construed to prohibit officials who have in the past been authorized to make records or information available to the public from continuing to do so...”

Section 1401.4 of the regulations, entitled “Hours for public inspection”, states that:

- “(a) Each agency shall accept requests for public access to records and produce records during all hours they are regularly open for business.”

Relevant to the matter is a decision rendered by the Appellate Division, Second Department. Among the issues was the validity of a limitation regarding the time permitted to inspect records established by a village pursuant to regulation. The Court held that the village was required to enable the public to inspect records during its regular business hours, stating in part that:

[Murtha v. Leonard, 620 NYS 2e 101 (1994), 210 AD 2d 411].

Based on the foregoing, the Town, in my view, cannot limit your ability to inspect records to a period less than its regular business hours.

I do not believe, however, that a member of the public may designate the date or dates on which he or she seeks to review records. If, for instance, records will be in use by staff on a particular date or during a particular period of time, an agency would not, in my view, be required to alter its schedule or work plan. In that instance, the agency could offer a series of dates to the person seeking to inspect the records in order that he or she could choose a date suitable to both parties. Similarly, if a request involves a variety of items, while the applicant may ask that certain records be made available sooner than others, I do not believe that he or she can require an agency to make records available in a certain order. Again, the kinds of factors mentioned earlier in conjunction with the time needed to respond to requests would be pertinent.

Third, when a record is available in its entirety under the Freedom of Information Law, any person has the right to inspect the record at no charge. However, there are often situations in which some aspects of a record, but not the entire record, may properly be withheld in accordance with the ground for denial appearing in §87(2). In that event, I do not believe that an applicant would have the right to inspect the record. In order to obtain the accessible information, upon payment of the established fee, I believe that the agency would be obliged to disclose those portions of the records after having made appropriate deletions from a copy of the record.

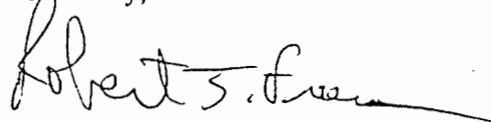

For example, I do not believe that you would have the right to inspect W-2 forms, for they include information that you have no right to see. Based upon the direction provided by the Freedom of Information Law and the courts, insofar as W-2 forms pertaining to public employees indicate gross wages, they must be disclosed. However, pursuant to §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law concerning the ability to protect against unwarranted invasions of personal privacy, I believe that portions of W-2 forms could be withheld, such as social security numbers, home addresses and net pay, for those items are largely irrelevant to the performance of one's duties. That conclusion has been reached judicially, and the court cited an advisory opinion rendered by this office in so holding (Day v. Town of Milton, Supreme Court, Saratoga County, April 27, 1992). In short, while portions of the forms containing names and gross wages must be disclosed, the town could seek payment of the requisite fee for photocopies, which would be made available after the deletion of certain details (see Van Ness v. Center for Animal Care and Control and the New York City Department of Health, Supreme Court, New York County, January 28, 1999).

Lastly, you questioned the ability of a municipality to charge fees for copies of local laws before the laws are passed. Although copies of proposed local laws frequently are made available free of charge, I know of no statute that would preclude an agency from charging its fee established under the Freedom of Information Law.

Mr. Peter W. Sluys

Mr. Douglas A. Kellner
Kellner, Chehebar & Deveney
One Madison Avenue
New York, NY 10010

Dear Mr. Kellner:

I have received your letter of July 22 in which you sought an advisory opinion concerning a denial of your request for records by the New York City Educational Construction Fund ("ECF").

You indicated that it is your belief that "115-87 Owners Corp. has made proposals to ECF and the City of New York to acquire ownership of the building or in some way to modify the ground lease for the apartment building" in which your client resides. That building "is run as a cooperative by 115-87 Owners Corp. which has a long-term lease from the City of New York and ECF." Consequently, on behalf of the client, you requested:

"Any proposal made by 115-87 Owners Corp., or anyone acting on their behalf, since January 1, 1998 relating to the sale, lease, refinancing or any other type of financial transaction regarding the property at 113-123 East 87th Street, New York, New York, also known as 108-118 East 88th Street, Block 1516, Lots 7 and 9007 (PS 169)."

The request was denied in its entirety by the Director of Finance of the ECF on the basis of §87(2)(c) of the Freedom of Information Law.

From my perspective, if 115-87 Owners Corp. is the only entity involved with the ECF in a possible sale, lease, refinancing or other financial transaction concerning the property at issue, the denial of the request would appear to be inappropriate and inconsistent with law. In this regard, I offer the following comments, some of which will reiterate contentions offered in advisory opinions previously rendered and with which you are familiar.

First, according to §451 of the Education Law, the ECF is "a corporate governmental agency of the state, constituting a public benefit corporation..." Since a public benefit corporation is a kind of public corporation (see General Construction Law, §66), and since a public corporation is an "agency" as that term is defined in §86(3) of the Freedom of Information Law, I believe that is an "agency" required to comply to the with that statute.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The provision upon which the ECF has relied permits an agency to deny access to records to the extent that disclosure "would impair present or imminent contract awards or collective bargaining negotiations." The key word in that provision in my opinion is "impair", and the question under that provision involves whether or the extent to which disclosure would "impair" a contracting or bargaining process by diminishing the ability of the government to reach an optimal agreement on behalf of the taxpayers. That an agreement has not been signed or consummated, in my view, is not determinative of rights of access or, conversely, an agency's ability to deny access to records. Rather, I believe that consideration of the effects of disclosure is the primary factor in determining the extent to which §87(2)(c) may justifiably be asserted.

As I understand its application, §87(2)(c) generally encompasses situations in which an agency or a party to negotiations maintains records that have not been made available to others. For example, if an agency seeking bids or proposals has received a number of bids, but the deadline for their submission has not been reached, premature disclosure for the bids to another possible submitter might provide that person or firm with an unfair advantage vis a vis those who already submitted bids. Further, disclosure of the identities of bidders or the number of bidders might enable another potential bidder to tailor his bid in a manner that provides him with an unfair advantage in the bidding process. In such a situation, harm or "impairment" would likely be the result, and the records could justifiably be denied. However, after the deadline for submission of bids or proposals are available after a contract has been awarded, and that, in view of the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law, "the successful bidder had no reasonable expectation of not having its bid open to the public" [Contracting Plumbers Cooperative Restoration Corp. v. Ameruso, 105 Misc. 2d 951, 430 NYS 2d 196, 198 (1980)]. Similarly, if an agency is involved in collective bargaining negotiations with a public employee union, and the union requests records reflective of the agency's strategy, the items that it considers to be important or otherwise, its estimates and projections, it is likely that disclosure to the union would place the agency at an unfair disadvantage at the bargaining table and, therefore, that disclosure would "impair" negotiating the process.

I point out that that the Court of Appeals has sustained the assertion of §87(2)(c) in a case that did not clearly involve "contract awards" or collective bargaining negotiations. In Murray v. Troy Urban Renewal Agency [56 NY2d 888 (1982)], the issue pertained to real property transactions where appraisals in possession of an agency were requested prior to the consummation of a transaction. Because premature disclosure would have enabled the public to know the prices the agency sought, thereby potentially precluding the agency from receiving optimal prices, the agency's denial was upheld [see Murray v. Troy Urban Renewal Agency, 56 NY 2d 888 (1982)].

In each of the kinds of the situations described earlier, there is an inequality of knowledge. In the bid situation, the person who seeks bids prior to the deadline for their submission is presumably unaware of the content of the bids that have already been submitted; in the context of collective bargaining, the union would not have all of the agency's records relevant to the negotiations; in the appraisal situation, the person seeking that record is unfamiliar with its contents. As suggested above, premature disclosure of bids would enable a potential bidder to gain knowledge in a manner unfair to other bidders and possibly to the detriment of an agency and, therefore, the public. Disclosure of an records regarding collective bargaining strategy or appraisals would provide knowledge to the recipient that might effectively prevent an agency from engaging in an agreement that is most beneficial to taxpayers.

In a case involving negotiations between a New York City agency and the Trump organization, the court referred to an opinion that I prepared and adopted the reasoning offered therein, stating that:

"Section 87(2)(c) relates to withholding records whose release could impair contract awards. However, here this was not relevant because there is no bidding process involved where an edge could be unfairly given to one company. Neither is this a situation where the release of confidential information as to the value or appraisals of property could lead to the City receiving less favorable price.

"In other words, since the Trump organization is the only party involved in these negotiations, there is no inequality of knowledge between other entities doing business with the City" [Community Board 7 v. Schaffer, 570 NYS 2d 769, 771 (1991); Aff'd 83 AD 2d 422; reversed on other grounds 84 NY 2d 148 (1994)].

Based on the foregoing, assuming that the records at issue are known to both parties and there are no other potential parties to a transaction, the rationale described above and the judicial decisions rendered to date suggest that §87(2)(c) could not justifiably have been asserted to withhold the records.

On the other hand, if 115-87 Owners Corp. is one among other entities that have made similar proposals to the ECF, the response may be different. In that event, if the ECF as owner of the property is considering the sale or lease of the parcel to others, and disclosure to your client would impair its ability to reach an agreement optimal to taxpayers, §87(2)(c) would likely serve as a basis for withholding some aspects of the documentation sought. Again, however, if there is no other entity that may be involved in the kind of transaction to which you referred, there would appear to be no basis for a denial of access to the records sought.

Even if entities other than that identified in your letter may be potentially be involved in a transaction, it is unlikely in my view that a denial of the request in its entirety would have been appropriate. The Court of Appeals has stressed that the Freedom of Information Law should be construed expansively. Most recently, in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY 2d 267 (1996)], the Court reiterated its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law, stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the Police Department contended that "complaint follow up reports" could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g), an exception separate from that cited in response to your request. The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276), and stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, stating that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

In short, even if an exception is pertinent, the records sought must be reviewed individually by an agency for the purpose of ascertaining the extent to which they might fall within the scope of one or more of the grounds for denial of access. As the Court stated later in the decision, an agency may deny access records under an exception only "as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" (id., 277).

Lastly, I note that the denial of your request failed to inform you of your right to appeal. The provision dealing with the right to appeal a denial of access to records is found in §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Further, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), which govern the procedural aspects of the Law, state that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation or the head, chief executive or governing body of other agencies shall hear appeals or shall designate a person or body to hear appeals regarding denial of access to records under the Freedom of Information Law.

(b) Denial of access shall be in writing stating the reason therefor and advising the person denied access of his or her right to appeal to the person or body established to hear appeals, and that person or body shall be identified by name, title, business address and business telephone number. The records access officer shall not be the appeals officer" (section 1401.7).

It is also noted that the state's highest court has held that a failure to inform a person denied access to records of the right to appeal enables that person to seek judicial review of a denial. Citing the Committee's regulations and the Freedom of Information Law, the Court of Appeals in Barrett v. Morgenthau held that:

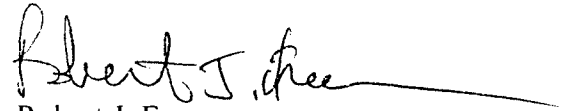

"[i]nasmuch as the District Attorney failed to advise petitioner of the availability of an administrative appeal in the office (see, 21 NYCRR 1401.7[b]) and failed to demonstrate in the proceeding that the procedures for such an appeal had, in fact, even been established (see, Public Officers Law [section] 87[1][b], he cannot be heard to complain that petitioner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies" [74 NY 2d 907, 909 (1989)].

In an effort to resolve the matter, a copy of this opinion will be sent to the ECF.

Dear Ms. Symonds:

I have received your letter of July 21. You have sought an advisory opinion concerning your "obligation to allow a private company to bring in their own equipment to the county clerk's office to scan county clerk records for their own profit at no charge to the private company."

From my perspective, there are two separate but related issues to consider. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, when records are accessible under the Freedom of Information Law, they must be made available for inspection and copying [see §87(2)]. In general, the purpose for which a request is made and the intended use of records are irrelevant to right of access [see Burke v. Yudelson, 368 NYS 2d 779, aff'd 51 AD 2d 673, 378 NYS 2d 165 (1976), M. Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health and Hosps. Corp. 62 NY 2d 75 (1984)]. If an applicant seeks to inspect accessible records, no fee may be charged. Further, an applicant may take notes or copy the contents of records on his or her own. If an applicant want copies of records, an agency is obliged to make copies available upon payment of the requisite fee [see §87 (1)(b)(iii) and 89 (3)].

In a case in which one of the issues involved the ability of a member of the public to bring and use his own photocopier, the court upheld regulations adopted by a village prohibiting the use of personal photocopiers, holding that:

"This Court must balance the petitioner's rights against the respondents' need to carry out their responsibilities. Given the voluminous requests for documents, respondents were justified in establishing regulations which would prevent unreasonable interference with their other governmental duties" [Murtha v. Leonard, Supreme Court, Nassau County, June 16, 1993; modified on other grounds, 210 AD2d 411 (1994)].

I note that the municipality in Murtha, a small village, had limited space and staff. In my opinion, the ability of an agency to prohibit the use of one's own copying or scanning equipment would be dependent in part on the reasonableness of a prohibition in view of the physical arrangements of the agency's premises and its staffing requirements or needs. If the use of scanning equipment would not be significantly inconvenient or disruptive, it is questionable whether an agency could prohibit the use of the equipment, especially in consideration of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law to make records available "wherever and whenever feasible" (see §84).

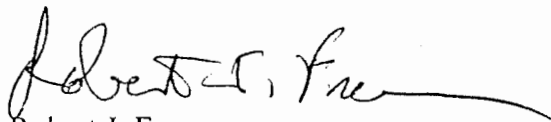

The second consideration involves the duty to maintain the custody, security and integrity of County records. Here I direct your attention to §57.25(1) of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law which states in relevant part that:

" It shall be the responsibility of every local officer to maintain records to adequately document the transaction of public business and the services and programs for which such officer is responsible; to retain and have custody of such records for so long as the records are needed for the conduct of the business of the office; to adequately protect such records; to cooperate with the local government's records management officer on programs for the orderly and efficient management of records including identification and management of inactive records and identification and preservation of records of enduring value; to dispose of records in accordance with legal requirements; and to pass on to his successor records needed for the continuing conduct of business of the office..."

Based on the foregoing, as County Clerk, an element of your responsibilities, in my view, involves "protecting" the records, ensuring that they are not stolen, defaced, misfiled or otherwise handled or used in a manner in which their value and utility to the County and the public generally may be compromised. If it is determined or reasonable to determine that the custody or integrity of the records is or would be threatened, I believe that you would have the authority to preclude a member of the public from taking temporary control of the records through the use of a scanner or similar equipment. If such a determination is reached, a person seeking the records would continue to have the right to inspect them or to obtain copies upon payment of the fees authorized by law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Joseph A. Glazer
President & CEO
Mental Health Association in New York State, Inc.
194 Washington Avenue - Suite 415
Albany, NY 12210

Dear Mr. Glazer:

I have received your letter of July 20 and the materials attached to it concerning a "Member Confidentiality Agreement" that must be signed by persons serving on Institutional Review Boards (IRB's). Those entities engage in "an observatory role in relation to certain activities at the State Psychiatric Hospital Facilities run by the New York State Office of Mental Health." According to the documentation, "a memo was distributed by the Research Foundation for Mental Hygiene, Inc. to members of the IRB's regarding their confidentiality responsibilities."

You wrote that you have "serious concerns regarding such mandatory gag agreements" and asked whether they may be "violative of any state laws regarding access to information."

While I question the scope of the meaning of the term "confidentiality", the memorandum on that subject distributed to IRB chairpersons appears in my view to encourage IRB members to recognize that various records that may come into their possession may or in some instances must be withheld from the public, and that disclosures to the public should be coordinated by the OMH public information officer. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as you may be aware, §89(1) of the Freedom of Information Law requires the Committee on Open Government to promulgate regulations concerning the procedural implementation of that statute (21 NYCRR Part 1401). In turn, §87(1) requires the head or governing body of an agency to adopt rules and regulations consistent those promulgated by the Committee and with the Freedom of Information Law. Section 1401.2 of the regulations provides in relevant part that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation and the head of an executive agency or governing body of other agencies shall be responsible for insuring compliance with the regulations herein, and shall designate one or more persons as records access officer by name or by specific job title and business address, who shall have the duty of coordinating agency response to public requests for access to records. The designation of one or more records access officers shall not be construed to prohibit officials who have in the past been authorized to make records or information available to the public from continuing to do so."

Based on the foregoing, I believe that the records access officer has the duty of coordinating responses to requests.

From my perspective, it is routine to limit the authority of agency personnel and others to make disclosures on their own initiative or in response to requests. In many agencies, requests for records are forwarded as a matter of policy to the designated records access officer in order that he or she can make an initial determination to grant or deny access in accordance with applicable law. The direction given in the memorandum appears to be consistent with that kind of procedure.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law pertains not only to records in the physical possession of an agency, but also those maintained for an agency. That statute applies to agency records, and §86(4) defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

The Court of Appeals has construed the definition as broadly as its specific language suggests. The first such decision that dealt squarely with the scope of the term "record" involved documents pertaining to a lottery sponsored by a fire department. Although the agency contended that the documents did not pertain to the performance of its official duties, i.e., fighting fires, but rather to a "nongovernmental" activity, the Court rejected the claim of a "governmental versus nongovernmental dichotomy" [see Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581 (1980)] and found that the documents constituted "records" subject to rights of access granted by the Law. Moreover, the Court determined that:

"The statutory definition of 'record' makes nothing turn on the purpose for which it relates. This conclusion accords with the spirit as well as the letter of the statute. For not only are the expanding boundaries of governmental activity increasingly difficult to draw, but in perception, if not in actuality, there is bound to be considerable crossover between governmental and nongovernmental activities, especially where both are carried on by the same person or persons" (id.).

In another decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, the Court focused on an agency claim that it could "engage in unilateral prescreening of those documents which it deems to be outside of the scope of FOIL" and found that such activity "would be inconsistent with the process set forth in the statute" [Capital Newspapers v. Whalen, 69 NY 2d 246, 253 (1987)]. The Court determined that:

"...the procedure permitting an unreviewable prescreening of documents - which respondents urge us to engraft on the statute - could be used by an uncooperative and obdurate public official or agency to block an entirely legitimate request. There would be no way to prevent a custodian of records from removing a public record from FOIL's reach by simply labeling it 'purely private.' Such a construction, which would thwart the entire objective of FOIL by creating an easy means of avoiding compliance, should be rejected" (id., 254).

More recently, in a case involving records in possession of a not-for-profit corporation that carried out certain functions for the State University pursuant to contract, it was held that the records were held for the University and, therefore, were agency records that fell within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law, even though they were not in the physical custody of the University [see Encore College Bookstores, Inc. v. Auxiliary Services Corporation of the State University, 87 NY2d 410 (1995)].

While I believe that the Research Foundation for Mental Hygiene, Inc. is an agency that falls within the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law [see e.g., Buffalo News v. Buffalo Enterprise Development Corp., 84 NY2d 488 (1994)], irrespective of that issue, my understanding is that its functions are performed for one or more agencies, such as the Office of Mental Health, and that, therefore, its records are maintained for an agency and are subject to rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law.

Third, based on several judicial decisions, an assertion or promise of confidentiality, unless it is based upon a statute, is generally meaningless. When confidentiality is conferred by a statute, an act of the State Legislature or Congress, records fall outside the scope of rights of access pursuant to §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states that an agency may withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". If there is no statute upon which an agency can rely to characterize records as "confidential" or "exempted from disclosure", the records are subject to whatever rights of access exist under the Freedom of Information Law [see Doolan v. BOCES, 48 NY 2d 341 (1979); Washington Post v. Insurance Department, 61 NY 2d 557 (1984); Gannett News Service, Inc. v. State Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse, 415 NYS 2d 780 (1979)]. As such, an assertion or promise of confidentiality, without more, would not in my view serve to enable an agency to withhold a record.

In the context of the kinds of records that may be pertinent to the duties of the Foundation, the IRB's and the Office of Mental Health, a statute that requires confidentiality is §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law. That statute essentially prohibits the disclosure of clinical records identifiable to a person receiving treatment except in circumstances that it prescribes. When records fall within the confidentiality requirements imposed by §33.13, they would be "specifically exempted from disclosure by...statute" in accordance with §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law.

Also pertinent to the duties of those concerned may be the Personal Privacy Protection Law, which deals in part with the disclosure of records or personal information by state agencies concerning data subjects. A "data subject" is "any natural person about whom personal information has been collected by an agency" [Personal Privacy Protection Law, §92(3)]. "Personal information" is defined to mean "any information concerning a data subject which, because of name, number, symbol, mark or other identifier, can be used to identify that data subject" [§92(7)]. For purposes of that statute, the term "record" is defined to mean "any item, collection or grouping of personal information about a data subject which is maintained and is retrievable by use of the name or other identifier of the data subject" [§92(9)].

With respect to disclosure, §96(1) of the Personal Privacy Protection Law states that "No agency may disclose any record or personal information", except in conjunction with a series of exceptions that follow. One of those exceptions involves a situation in which a record is "subject to article six of this chapter [the Freedom of Information Law], unless disclosure of such information would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as defined in paragraph (a) of subdivision two of section eighty-nine of this chapter." Section 89(2-a) of the Freedom of Information Law states that "Nothing in this article shall permit disclosure which constitutes an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as defined in subdivision two of this section if such disclosure is prohibited under section ninety-six of this chapter." Therefore, when a state agency cannot disclose records pursuant to §96 of the Personal Protection Law, it is precluded from disclosing under the Freedom of Information Law.

When either §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law or the Personal Privacy Protection Law applies, there is essentially no discretion to disclose to the public. In other circumstances, however, although records may be withheld, there is no obligation to do so. Reference is made in the materials to "proprietary rights." Depending on the effects of disclosure, so-called "proprietary" information might properly be withheld under §87(2)(d) of the Freedom of Information Law. Nevertheless, unlike the provisions cited above, under §87(2)(d) and the remaining grounds for denial in the Freedom of Information Law, there is nothing in law that would prohibit disclosure. Section 87(2)(d) permits (but does not require) an agency to withhold records or portions that:

"are trade secrets or are submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise or derived from information obtained from a commercial enterprise and which if disclosed would cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the subject enterprise..."

Mr. Joseph A. Glazer

The mere characterization of a record as "proprietary" or as a trade secret, like a claim of confidentiality, is essentially meaningless; the capacity to deny access involves the extent to which disclosure "would cause substantial injury to the competitive position" of a commercial enterprise.

In sum, it is likely that many of the records used or maintained by IRB members may be "confidential", but that would be so only when a statute prohibits disclosure. In other instances, there may be discretion to withhold under the Freedom of Information Law, but no legal obligation to do so. Perhaps most importantly, the Freedom of Information Law requires agencies to adopt regulations regarding the procedural implementation of the law. In accordance with such a procedure, one or more "records access officers" may be given the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests and disclosure practices. Unless authority to disclose is otherwise granted to persons other than the records access officer, limiting the ability of those other persons to disclose is, in my opinion, within the discretion of an agency.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

As a general rule, we have advised that FOIL requests are public. However, if a request itself includes information of an intimate nature, identifying details may be deleted to protect privacy. For instance, if a recipient of public assistance writes to a department of social services, indicates that he or she is a recipient and asks for records about himself or herself, disclosure would indicate that he or she is poor, which is nobody's business. In that case, personally identifying details may be deleted.

If a request is from a business entity or a person acting in a business capacity, there would be nothing intimate or personal about the request. Similarly, if a request discloses nothing intimate or personal due to the nature of the subject matter, I do not believe that there would be a basis for denial. For example, if I request minutes of the meeting of the town board, the request indicates nothing personal about me and would, in my view, be public.

Dear Judge Kessler:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of July 23 and the correspondence attached to it. You have asked that I review a request made under the Freedom of Information Law and your response to it.

The request, which was made by a law firm, involves "information....concerning applications for zoning variances, approvals and denials thereof, applications for Building Permits, approvals and denials thereof, and actions brought by the Town of Rhinebeck to enforce its Zoning Laws and Building Codes for all years since 1980." The request later specified the kinds of records included within the request, all of which pertain to the period of 1980 to the present, such as complaints received by Town officials concerning "construction, operations or activities in the Town", "pleadings in every enforcement action commenced by the Town....making allegations of violations of the Building Code, the Zoning Law or Building Permits", all citations issued in relation to those provisions and minutes of meetings in which reference is made to applications for zoning variances.

In response, although you agreed to comply to the extent possible, you contended that a request encompassing such a lengthy period, nineteen years, is "unreasonable." The remainder of the response dealt with each aspect of the request and indicated that some records, depending on the means by which they are filed, could be located and made available for inspection or upon payment of the request fees for copying, but that others could not be retrieved without additional identifying information.

First, the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law is extensive, for it includes all "agency records" within its scope. Section 86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, irrespective of the age of a document, if it continues to be maintained by the Town, I believe that it would constitute a "record" that falls within the framework of the Freedom of Information Law [see Capital Newspapers v. Whalen, 69 NY2d 246 (1987)].

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, with one exception, the records sought would appear to be available, for none of the grounds for denial would be applicable. The only category of requested records that would in my opinion include the ability to deny access is complaints. Depending on attendant facts, personally identifying details pertaining to complainants might justifiably be deleted on the ground that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" pursuant to §87(2)(b).

Third, and most importantly, I believe that the key issue involves the extent to which the request "reasonably describes" the records sought as required by §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law. I point out that it has been held by the Court of Appeals that to deny a request on the ground that it fails to reasonably describe the records, an agency must establish that "the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

The Court in Konigsberg found that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth and also stated that:

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency']" (id. at 250).

Hon. Bernard Kessler

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping system. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

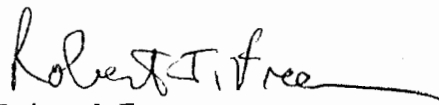

While I am unfamiliar with the recordkeeping systems of the Town, to extent that the records sought can be located with reasonable effort, the request, in my opinion would have met the requirement of reasonably describing the records. On the other hand, if the records are not maintained in a manner that permits their retrieval except by reviewing perhaps hundreds or even thousands of records individually in an effort to locate those falling within the scope of the request, to that extent, the request would not in my opinion meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

In the context of the matter at hand, there are several aspects of the request that do not appear to meet the requirement that the records be "reasonably described." For instance, you indicated that records relating to applications for zoning variances are kept alphabetically, by applicants' names. Since the request seeks the records by means of a time period, chronologically, there would be no way to locate the records other than by reviewing each applicant file to ascertain whether it falls within the scope of the request. Minutes of meetings are apparently not indexed by subject matter, and all minutes for the past nineteen years would have to be reviewed to determine whether they contain information falling within the request. You wrote that violations and citations "are included in general correspondence to and from the Town", and that a "better identification of same would be most helpful."

In those and similar other aspects of the request, I do not believe that the firm seeking the records would have met the standard of reasonably describing the records. In each of those instances, the Town does not maintain the records in a manner that enables Town officials to locate the items within a category of records sought without reviewing virtually every record filed over the course of nineteen years. According to the Court of Appeals in Konigsberg, an agency is not required to engage such extensive searches to locate and retrieve the records.

I hope that I have been of assistance. If you would like to discuss the matter further, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Rafael Robles
88-A-8275
Great Meadow Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 51
Comstock, NY 12821

Dear Mr. Robles:

I have received your letter of July 23 and the materials attached to it. You have sought my opinion concerning a request for records that you made to the New York City Police Department.

From my perspective, several elements of the request were adequately considered in the opinion addressed to you on March 22. The primary focus of the more recent letter appears to involve records relating to overtime, attendance and a claim of disability by a particular police officer. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Although tangential to the issues raised by your request, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law generally does not require that agencies maintain or prepare records [see §89(3)], but that an exception involves payroll information. Specifically, §87(3) of the Law states in relevant part that:

"Each agency shall maintain...

(b) a record setting forth the name, public office address, title and salary of every officer or employee of the agency..."

Mr. Rafael Robles

While §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law authorizes an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy", the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public employees. First, it is clear that public employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public employees are required to be more accountable than others. Second, with regard to records pertaining to public employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a public employee's official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977].

Based upon the foregoing, it is clear in my view that records reflective of salaries of public employees must be prepared and made available. Similarly, records reflective of other payments, whether they pertain to overtime, or participation in work-related activities, for example, would be available, for those records in my view would be relevant to the performance of one's official duties.

It is noted that one of the decisions cited above, Capital Newspapers v. Burns, supra, involved a request for records reflective of the days and dates of sick leave claimed by a particular police officer. The Appellate Division found that those records must be disclosed, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. The decision indicates that the public has both economic and safety reasons for knowing whether public employees perform their duties when scheduled to do so. As such, attendance records, including those involving overtime work, are in my opinion clearly available, for they are relevant to the performance of public employees' official duties.

Insofar as the records sought include reference to a particular medical problem or injury, I believe that they may be withheld on the ground that disclosure would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Even though they might not be characterized as medical records, because they contain information that is medical in nature, they may be withheld to that extent [see Hanig v. NYS Department of Motor Vehicles, 79 NY2d 106 (1992)].

Lastly, you requested "a complete itemized inventory" of the records that might be withheld with a justification for the denial of access to each. In my view, the Department would not be required to prepare such an inventory. I am unaware of any provision of the Freedom of Information Law or judicial decision that would require that a denial at the agency level identify every record withheld or include a description of the reason for withholding each document. Such a requirement has been imposed under the federal Freedom of Information Act, which may involve the preparation of a so-called "Vaughn index" [see Vaughn v. Rosen, 484 F.2d 820 (1973)]. Such an index provides an analysis of documents withheld by an agency as a means of justifying a denial and insuring that the burden of proof remains on the agency. Further, one decision suggests the preparation of that kind of analysis might in some instances subvert the purpose for which exemptions are claimed. In that decision, an inmate requested records referring to him as a member of organized crime or an escape risk. In affirming a denial by a lower court, the Appellate Division found that:

"All of these documents were inter-agency or intra-agency materials exempted under Public Officers Law section 87(2)(g) and some were materials the disclosure of which could endanger the lives or safety of certain individuals, and thus were exempted under Public Officers Law section 87(2)(f). The failure of the respondents and the Supreme Court, Westchester County, to disclose the underlying facts contained in these documents so as to establish that they did not fall 'squarely within the ambit of [the] statutory exemptions' (Matter of Farberman & Sons v. New York City Health and Hosps. Corp., 62 NY 2d 75, 83; Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 NY 2d 567, 571), did not constitute error. To make such disclosure would effectively subvert the purpose of these statutory exemptions which is to preserve the confidentiality of this information" [Nalo v. Sullivan, 125 AD 2d 311, 312 (1987)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Crayton:

I have received your letter of July 20. You asked that this office "intervene" on your behalf in connection with your efforts in obtaining records from the Office of the Niagara County Clerk relating to an indictment and its dismissal.

In this regard, first, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to "intervene" in the legal sense or compel an agency to grant or deny access to records.

Second, as I understand the matter, the records in question would likely have been sealed and be beyond public rights of access.

In general, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Relevant to the matter is the initial ground for denial, §87(2)(a), which pertains to records that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". One such statute is §160.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law (CPL). Specifically, subdivision (1) of §160.50 states in relevant part that:

"Upon the termination of a criminal action or proceeding against a person in favor of such person...the record of such action or proceeding shall be sealed and the clerk of the court wherein such criminal action or proceeding was terminated shall immediately notify the commissioner of the division of criminal justice services and the heads of all appropriate police departments and other law enforcement agencies that the action has been terminated in favor of the accused, and unless the court has directed otherwise, that the record of such action or proceeding has been sealed. Upon receipt of notification of such termination and sealing...

(c) all official records and papers, including judgments and orders of a court but not including published court decisions or opinions or records and briefs on appeal, relating to the arrest or prosecution, including all duplicates and copies thereof, on file with the division of criminal justice services, any court, police agency, or prosecutor's office shall be sealed and not made available to any person or public or private agency..."

Assuming that a court in which a proceeding was heard has not directed otherwise, typically when charges are dismissed in favor of an accused, records of or relating to the charges would be sealed in conjunction with the provisions quoted above. Since the indictment to which you referred was dismissed, it is assumed that the records have been sealed.

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Reid:

I have received your determination of an appeal rendered on July 27 in response to a request made by Samuel B. Golub, M.D. In brief, you determined that certain records could be made available for inspection pursuant to the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act ("FERPA"), but you indicated that FERPA "does not require an educational institution to provide copies of any educational records."

While I agree that FERPA does not provide a right to have copies of records, I believe that the applicant would enjoy such a right under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, as you are aware, the State University of New York clearly constitutes an "agency" as that term is defined in §86(3) of the Freedom of Information Law, and §86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the definition, the materials requested constitute agency records. While they are "education records" subject only to inspection under FERPA, they are also "records" subject to the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law, which states that accessible records must be made available for inspection and copying [§87(2)] and that an agency is required to make copies of those records upon payment of a fee [§89(3)]. I point out, too, that the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government, which have the force and effect of law, state in relevant part that "[a]ny conflicts among laws governing public access to records shall be construed in favor of the widest possible availability of public records" [21 NYCRR §1401.1(d)].

In sum, although FERPA does not confer a right to obtain copies of records accessible under FERPA, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law requires that copies be made available upon payment of the requisite fee.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Bruce E. Baker

Dear Mr. Baker:

I have received your letter of July 26 and the materials attached to it. You have questioned certain responses to your requests made under the Freedom of Information Law to the Hoosick Falls Central School District.

The first issue that you raised involves a request for a copy of a videotape of a meeting. You contend that the District has the resources to reproduce the tape; the Superintendent has indicated that the District does not have the resources to do so and must find an entity outside of the District to prepare a copy. In short, if the Superintendent has stated that the District does not have the ability to reproduce the tape, I have no reason to conclude otherwise.

If the District does not have the capacity to prepare a reproduction and must have a duplicate prepared by a private entity, it could charge a fee based on the "actual cost of reproduction" [see Freedom of Information Law, §87(1)(b)(iii)]. I believe that I discussed the matter with Ms. Chase, and that she informed me that the local entity that could prepare a new tape had no "pricelist". In that event, it is assumed that a bill for services rendered would indicate the payment to that entity. If there are postage or similar charges, they, too, could be included in determining the "actual cost."

Second, it has been advised that when an agency produces copies of records in response to a request but the applicant for the records has not paid the requisite fee, the agency can refuse to honor further requests until the fee is paid.

There is no judicial decision of which I am aware that is pertinent to the matter. However, when a request for copies of records is served upon an agency, both the agency and the applicant bear a responsibility. The agency is responsible for compliance with the Freedom of Information Law by retrieving the records sought and disclosing them to the extent required by law. The agency is also required to produce copies of records "[u]pon payment of, or offer to pay, the fee prescribed therefor" [see Freedom of Information Law, §89(3)]. Concurrently, if the applicant requests copies, I believe that he or she bears the responsibility of paying the appropriate fee.

If an agency has prepared copies of records in good faith and the applicant fails or refuses to pay the fee, I do not believe that the agency would be required to make available those copies that have been prepared. In my view, it follows that an agency should not be required to honor ensuing requests until the applicant has fulfilled his or her responsibility by tendering the fee for copies previously made.

I am unaware of the entirety of the facts in relation to the situation, and the propriety of the District's response would in my view be dependent on its reasonableness in conjunction with the attendant facts.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ronald J. Hall
96-A-5913
Elmira Correctional Facility
Elmira, NY 14902-0500

Dear Mr. Hall:

I have received your letter of July 26 and the materials attached to it. You have sought an opinion concerning your right to obtain records pertaining to certain indictments that apparently led to your conviction from the Office of the Rockland County District Attorney. The request was denied "since the documents you seek pertain to a criminal matter the appeal of which has not yet been exhausted", citing §87(2)(e)(i) and (iii).

Those provisions permit an agency to withhold "records compiled for law enforcement purposes" when disclosure would:

- "(i) interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings....
- (iii) identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation..."

In my view, subparagraph (i), if my understanding of the facts is accurate, would not serve as an appropriate basis for a denial of access. Subparagraph (iii) might properly be asserted to withhold some aspects of the records, but it would not likely justify a blanket denial of your request. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

When an investigation is ongoing, to the extent that disclosure would impair the ability of the government to solve a crime or prosecute offenders, for example, I believe that §87(2)(e)(i) would clearly be applicable. Similarly, premature disclosure of evidentiary material or other records might interfere with a judicial proceeding, in which case, the cited provision might properly be asserted.

In this instance, however, as I understand the matter, the investigation has been completed and you have been convicted. If that is so, the provision at issue would not in my opinion serve as a basis for denial.

In a decision recently rendered by the Appellate Division, Second Department [Pittari v. Pirro, ___AD2d___, NYLJ, August 20, 1999], the case involved a request by an attorney for all records pertaining to the arrest and prosecution of his client while the case was pending and before any determination of guilt or innocence. The Court referred to decisions rendered under the counterpart to the New York statute, the federal Freedom of Information Act (5 USC §552), and found that the exception analogous to §87(2)(e)(i):

“...applies to documents applicable to a pending criminal investigation, since disclosure of such information ‘could result in destruction of evidence, chilling and intimidation of witnesses, and revelation of the scope and nature of the Government’s investigation’ (see, Solar Sources, Inc. v. U.S., 142 F3d 1033, 1039)...

“The determination of the Court of Appeals in Matter of Gould v. New York City Police Dept. (89 NY2d 267, supra) does not contradict this analysis. That case held that complaint follow-up reports (commonly referred to as DD5's) and police activity logs (commonly referred to as memo books) are agency records subject to disclosure under FOIL. The question of whether those records were exempt from disclosure on the ground that disclosure would interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings was not explored (see, Matter of Gould v. New York City Police Dept., supra, at 277). It is apparent in Gould that the petitioners’ criminal proceedings had concluded.

“In the instant case, on the other hand, the petitioner acknowledged in his FOIL requests that the documents requested were ‘pertaining to his arrest and prosecution.’ Nor was there any dispute that the criminal action was pending when the FOIL request was made... Such disclosure during the course of a criminal proceeding would have a chilling effect on the pending prosecution (see, Matter of Huston v. Turkel, 236 AD2d 283; Hawkins v. Kurlander, 98 AD2d 14, 16).”

In my view, the clear implication of the foregoing is that §87(2)(e)(i) is pertinent before a trial, a plea of guilty, a conviction or a dismissal. After those events have occurred, the ability to solve a crime, the destruction of evidence or the intimidation of witnesses, for example, become irrelevant in terms of their impact on a proceeding. In this instance, the request appears to have been made following a conviction but during the pendency of an appeal. In that kind of circumstance, with one exception, I do not believe that the provision at issue may justifiably be asserted. That exception would pertain to the situation in which there may be a number of individuals involved in an investigation and the conviction of or dismissal of charges against one defendant represents one aspect of a larger case involving others in which related investigations or criminal proceedings have not yet resulted in a trial, a plea, a conviction or a dismissal.

The other provision cited in the denial, subparagraph (iii) of §87(2)(e), may be more difficult to analyze. If indeed there may have been confidential sources, I believe that an agency may engage in redactions adequate to prevent the disclosure of information that could be used to identify those persons. However, the phrase "confidential information relating to a criminal investigation" has never been the subject of in depth judicial analysis. In general, it is my belief that the exceptions to rights of access appearing in §87(2) of the Freedom of Information Law are intended to enable the government to prevent or avoid harmful consequences; I do not believe that a court would ordinarily accept an assertion based on §87(2)(e)(iii) as a means of withholding a file in its entirety, particularly after a conviction..

I note that the Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, has stressed that the Freedom of Information Law should be construed expansively. Most recently, in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY 2d 267 (1996)], the Court reiterated its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law, stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the Police Department contended that "complaint follow up reports" could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g), an exception separate from that cited in response to your request. The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276), and stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, stating that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink vl. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

Lastly, other grounds for denial and considerations may also be pertinent, and it appears that you addressed them in the "discussion" portion of your appeal.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Hernand Vasquez
96-R-4694
Orleans Correctional Facility

Albion, NY 14411

Dear Mr. Vasquez:

I have received your letter of July 26, as well as the materials attached to this office. You indicated that you requested information pertaining to property held during your incarceration at the Queens House of Detention, and you "appealed" to this office in an effort to resolve the matter and asked that I provide the information in question.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide and guidance concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to compel an agency to grant or deny access to records, and it does not have custody or control of records generally. In short, I cannot make the information of your interest available because this office does not possess it.

Second, pursuant to the regulations promulgated by the Committee (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests for records, and requests should ordinarily be sent to that person. While I believe that the recipient of your request should have responded directly in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law or forwarded the request to the appropriate person, it is suggested that you renew your request and send it to Mr. Thomas Antenen, Records Access Officer, Department of Corrections, 60 Hudson Street, 6th Floor, New York, NY 10013.

Lastly, for future reference, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record

Mr. Hernand Vasquez

reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

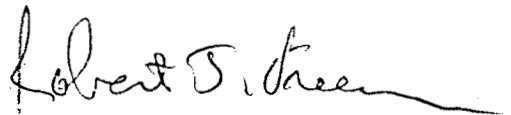

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Phil Christie

Dear Mr. Christie:

I have received your letter of July 28 and the materials relating to it. You requested records from the Bedford Central School District that include its bank account numbers. The District indicated that the bank account numbers are "confidential" and that they must be deleted, and that you would be charged for copies from which the deletions would be made.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

From my perspective, the only ground for denial of potential relevance is §87(2)(i), which authorizes an agency to withhold "computer access codes". Based on its legislative history, that provision is intended to permit agencies to withhold access codes which if disclosed would provide the recipient of a code with the ability to gain unauthorized access to information. Insofar as disclosure would enable a person with an access code to gain access to information without the authority to do so, or to shift, add, delete or alter information, i.e., to make "electronic transfers", I believe that the bank account numbers could justifiably be withheld. On the other hand, if disclosure would not permit an individual to gain unauthorized access information or the ability to alter the information, §87(2)(i) would not likely be applicable. In that event, the records would be available in their entirety, and you would have the right to inspect them at no charge.

Second, assuming that the District may properly delete the bank account numbers, I do not believe that you would have the right to inspect the records, for they include information that you have no right to see. The District could in that circumstance seek payment of the requisite fee for photocopies, which would be made available after the deletion of the bank account numbers (see Van Ness v. Center for Animal Care and Control and the New York City Department of Health, Supreme Court, New York County, January 28, 1999).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

P.O. Box 2000
Pine City, NY 14871

Dear Mr. Henriquez:

I have received your letter of July 26 concerning unanswered requests made under the Freedom of Information Law. You have raised questions concerning the matter, and in this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, while there is no agency that is empowered to enforce the Freedom of Information Law, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to offer advice and opinions pertaining to that statute.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

Mr. Michael Henriquez

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Third, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since you wrote that you are attempting to obtain "the location and present name" of a particular woman, I note that home addresses of members of the public may generally be withheld pursuant to §87(2)(b) on the ground that disclosure would result in "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Bouros:

I have received your letter of July 24 in which you sought assistance concerning an unanswered request for records maintained at the Riker's Island Correctional Facility.

In this regard, pursuant to the regulations promulgated by the Committee (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests for records, and requests should ordinarily be sent to that person. While I believe that the recipient of your request should have responded directly in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law or forwarded the request to the appropriate person, it is suggested that you renew your request and send it to Mr. Thomas Antenen, Records Access Officer, Department of Corrections, 60 Hudson Street, 6th Floor, New York, NY 10013.

For future reference, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Victor Iadarola

Fishkill Correctional Facility
Beacon, NY 12508

Dear Mr. Iadarola:

I have received your letter of July 27 and the materials attached to it. You have asked that I review them and "make a finding whether the information should be released" to you.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to advise with respect to the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to issue a "finding" that is binding or to compel an agency to grant or deny access to records. Nevertheless, based on a review of the correspondence, I offer the following comments.

First, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Since I am unaware of the contents of the records sought or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot advise as to the extent you may have a right of access to them. However, there are several grounds for denial that may be pertinent. For instance, §87(2)(b) permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy"; §87(2)(e)(iii) and (iv) provide, respectively, that an agency may withhold records compiled for law enforcement purposes when disclosure involves "confidential information relating to a criminal investigation" or would reveal other than routine criminal investigative techniques or procedures; and §87(2)(f) authorizes an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person." It is possible that those exceptions, depending on attendant circumstances, the contents of the records, and the effects of disclosure, might properly be asserted.

Mr. Paul Hynard

Dear Mr. Hynard:

I have received your letter of July 26 and the correspondence attached to it. You have asked that this office notify the Office of the New York County District Attorney and the United States Customs Service of their duty to respond to requests for records.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is a New York State agency authorized to provide advice concerning the New York Freedom of Information Law. That statute is applicable to entities of state and local government in New York. The Customs Service is a federal agency that falls within the coverage of the federal Freedom of Information Act (5 USC 552). As such, issues pertaining to compliance with the federal Act are beyond the jurisdiction of the Committee.

Having communicated with the Office of the New York County District Attorney on many occasions, I am sure that its staff is fully familiar with the provisions of the Freedom of Information Law. Nevertheless for your knowledge and future reference, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

Mr. Burnie Daniels

Dear Mr. Daniels:

I have received your letter of July 26 concerning an unanswered request made under the Freedom of Information Law to the records access officer at the Ontario County Jail. You have asked that I contact the Jail on your behalf to ask why your request has not been answered. While I will not do so, I offer the following comments and will send this response to the County Jail.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

Mr. Burnie Daniels

who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

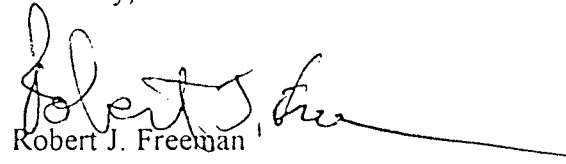

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Second, in the event that no inventory of materials kept by the Jail law library is maintained, you asked that such a list be compiled. Here I point out that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and that §89(3) of that statute provides in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, if no inventory exists, there would be no obligation on the part of Jail staff to prepare an inventory on your behalf.

Lastly, the same provision requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. If the invoices that you requested are kept or filed in a particular area and can be located and identified with reasonable effort, I believe that that aspect of your request would reasonably describe the records. If, however, the invoices are filed with all other County invoices and are kept in chronological order, for example, locating those of your interest would involve reviewing every invoice pertaining to a two year period. In that situation, the request would not, in my view, meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Richard A. Brinson

Dear Mr. Brinson:

I have received your letter of August 3 pertaining to the advisory opinion prepared on July 27 in response to your inquiry. Although you presented additional information, I do not believe that the outcome would be significantly different, even if your contentions are accurate.

The issue involved a request for a "market appraisal", and I referred to two grounds for denial pertinent to ascertaining rights of access, paragraphs (c) and (g) of §87(2) of the Freedom of Information Law. Your comments focus on the former and your contention that since an agreement had been reached, any impairment of the ability of the government agency to reach an optimal agreement would become irrelevant. While that may be so, the other ground for denial remains applicable. Again, under §87(2)(g), those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials consisting of opinions, recommendations, advice and the like may be withheld. By its nature, an appraisal consists, at least in substantial part, of opinions. That being so, even if §87(2)(c) no longer applies, those portions of the record sought may in my view continue to be withheld.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the Freedom of Information Law.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Ms. Kathy Hovis
Ithaca Journal
123 West State Street
Ithaca, NY 14850

Dear Ms. Hovis:

I have received your correspondence of August 9 and the materials attached to it. You have asked that I comment with respect to a contention by the Tompkins County District Attorney that autopsy reports are "confidential" and that "[u]nauthorized disclosure...violates the law..."

While autopsy reports and related records are not accessible as of right to the public generally, based on a review of the applicable statute, I do not believe that disclosure of those records would constitute a violation of law or that there is any prohibition against disclosure.

In his letter to the Tompkins County Medical Examiner, the District Attorney referred to §677(3)(b) of the County Law, which pertains to autopsy reports and related records and states that:

"Such records shall be open to inspection by the district attorney of the county. Upon application of the personal representative, spouse or next of kin of the deceased to the coroner or the medical examiner, a copy of the autopsy report, as described in subdivision two of this section shall be furnished to such applicant. Upon proper application of any person who is or may be affected in a civil or criminal action by the contents of the record of any investigation, or upon application of any person having a substantial interest therein, an order may be made by a court of record, or by a justice of the supreme court, that the record of that investigation be made available for his inspection, or that a transcript thereof be furnished to him, or both."

Based upon the foregoing, the Freedom of Information Law in my opinion is inapplicable as a basis for seeking or obtaining an autopsy report or other records described in §677, for the right to obtain such records is based solely on §677(3)(b). In my view, only a district attorney and the next of kin of the deceased have a right of access to records subject to §677; any others would be required to obtain a court order based on demonstration of substantial interest in the records to gain a right of access.

Nevertheless, a careful reading of the provision quoted above indicates that nothing in its terms prohibits a coroner, a medical examiner, a district attorney or others from disclosing the records falling within its coverage. In my experience, there have been numerous situations in which coroners and medical examiners, as well as district attorneys and police departments, have asserted their discretionary authority to disclose records falling within the scope of §677(3)(b), even though there was no obligation to do so.

In my view, a finding that records are confidential and cannot be disclosed must be consistent with the specific and unequivocal language of a statute. For example, and for the purpose of comparing the language of § 677(3)(b) of the County Law with another provision of the County Law, I believe that §308(4) is a statute that prohibits disclosure and leaves no discretion to the agency that maintains the records falling within its scope. The cited provision states that:

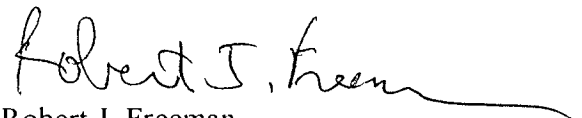

"Records, in whatever form they may be kept, of calls made to a municipality's E911 system shall not be made available to or obtained by any entity or person, other than that municipality's public safety agency, another government agency or body, or a private entity or a person providing medical, ambulance or other emergency services, and shall not be utilized for any commercial purpose other than the provision of emergency services."

Section 677(3)(b) provides a right of access to certain persons, but nowhere specifies that disclosures to others is prohibited. In contrast, §308(4) states that certain records "shall not be made available" except in specified circumstances.

In sum, while the news media and the general public may have no right to autopsy reports and related records, there is nothing in the law which in my view precludes a government official or agency from disclosing those records.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. William V. Camfield
Turning Point Enterprises
263 Verbeck Ave
Schaghticoke, NY 12154

Dear Mr. Camfield:

I have received your letter of August 3 and the materials relating to it. You described a series of frustrations involving your efforts in gaining information from the Town of Stillwater. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, with respect to your recent requests for an "itemized accounting", it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. Section 89(3) of that statute states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, if no itemized accounting exists, there would be no obligation on the part of the Town to prepare such a record on your behalf. Similarly, if there is no record indicating the status of a certain account on a given date, there would be no requirement that the Town create a record containing the information sought.

Second, insofar as records exist, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, to the extent that the information that you are seeking exists in the form of a record or records, it would appear to be available, for none of the grounds for denial would be pertinent.

Third, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law applies to all agency records, irrespective of the location in which they are maintained. Section 86(4) of the Law defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, in addition to records held by Town officials, records maintained for the Town by the engineering firm to which you referred would also fall within the scope of the Freedom of Information Law.

Lastly, in view of the delays that you have encountered, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

If a request is voluminous and a significant amount of time is needed to locate records and review them to determine rights of access, a delay beyond five business days, in view of those and perhaps the other kinds of factors mentioned earlier, might be reasonable. On the other hand, if a record or report is clearly public and can be found easily, there would appear to be no rational basis for delaying disclosure. In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Nolen:

I have received your letters of July 7, both of which reached this office on August 2. As suggested in other recent correspondence, please note the zip code of this office.

With respect to the first letter, the issue relates to §87(3)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which requires that “[e]ach agency shall maintain...a record setting forth the name, public office address, title and salary of every officer or employee of the agency....” You indicated that the Town of Dannemora has contended that it may provide a post office address for all its employees, rather than a work location. You questioned whether that would satisfy the requirement that a “public office address” be included in the record required to be maintained pursuant to the cited provision. You also questioned the use of nicknames or initials.

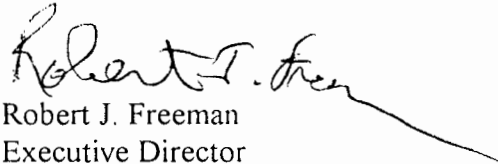

In this regard, as you may recall, the manner in which names appear on the record in question was considered some time ago in an opinion that you sought. The issue relative to the address has not arisen. However, I do not believe that providing a post office box for all employees would meet the requirement imposed by the law. In my view, one’s “public office address” is the location at which a public employee is routinely stationed on where his or her usual office is located.

In conjunction with the second letter, enclosed as requested are the latest supplement to the Committee’s annual report and copies of letters sent to you since the beginning of this year.

Dear Mr. Jones:

I have received your undated letter, which reached this office on August 2. You indicated that the receipt of a request for records of the New York City Police Department was acknowledged and that you were informed that a response would be rendered in approximately 120 days. You wrote that you need the records to perfect your appeal and you asked that the response to your request be "expedited."

In this regard, there is no provision in the Freedom of Information Law that requires an agency to expedite its response to a request or give a preference when records are to be used in a judicial proceeding. I note that the statute provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89 (3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

While an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records, the number of other requests received and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. O. Shelly

Dear Mr. Shelly:

I have received your letter of August 1 in which you sought an opinion concerning access to a portion of the State Insurance Fund's Claims-Medical Department Procedures Manual that you characterized as "Procedure 90." You referred to the exceptions in the Freedom of Information Law pertaining to inter-agency and intra-agency materials and to trade secrets, and you contended that neither would apply. In addition, you indicated that the Manual is available to many agency employees on an intranet.

In this regard, while I am unfamiliar with the contents of Procedure 90, an analogous issue has arisen in the past, and as you inferred, the provision of primary significance is §87(2)(d) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are trade secrets or are submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise or derived from information obtained from a commercial enterprise and which if disclosed would cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the subject enterprise."

I agree with your contention that the State Insurance Fund ("the Fund") "does not regulate business." Your reference, however, to §89(5) is misplaced, for that provision deals with the protection of records submitted by commercial enterprises to state agencies. In this instance, the record at issue is a portion of a manual apparently prepared by the Fund.

As I understand its functions, the Fund essentially operates as an insurance company in competition with other insurance carriers licensed to do business in the state. While the Fund as a state agency is not typical of commercial enterprises, my understanding is that, in many respects, it carries out many of its duties as an entity in competition with private firms in the insurance industry.

Most pertinent to the matter, I note that there is case law indicating that when a governmental entity performs functions essentially commercial in nature in competition with private, profit making entities, it may withhold records pursuant to §87(2)(d) in appropriate circumstances (Syracuse & Oswego Motor Lines, Inc. v. Frank, Sup. Ct., Onondaga Cty., October 15, 1985). In this instance, assuming that the Fund is engaged in competition with private firms engaged in the same area of commercial activity, I believe that §87(2)(d) would serve as a potential basis for a denial of access.

The question under §87(2)(d) involves the extent, if any, to which disclosure would "cause substantial injury to the competitive position" of a commercial entity. The concept and parameters of what might constitute a "trade secret" were discussed in Kewanee Oil Co. v. Bicron Corp., which was decided by the United States Supreme Court in 1973 (416 U.S. 470). Central to the issue was a definition of "trade secret" upon which reliance is often based. Specifically, the Court cited the Restatement of Torts, section 757, comment b (1939), which states that:

"[a] trade secret may consist of any formula, pattern, device or compilation of information which is used in one's business, and which gives him an opportunity to obtain an advantage over competitors who do not know or use it. It may be a formula for a chemical compound, a process of manufacturing, treating or preserving materials, a pattern for a machine or other device, or a list of customers" (id. at 474, 475).

In its review of the definition, the court stated that "[T]he subject of a trade secret must be secret, and must not be of public knowledge or of a general knowledge in the trade or business" (id.). The phrase "trade secret" is more extensively defined in 104 NY Jur 2d 234 to mean:

"...a formula, process, device or compilation of information used in one's business which confers a competitive advantage over those in similar businesses who do not know it or use it. A trade secret, like any other secret, is something known to only one or a few and kept from the general public, and not susceptible to general knowledge. Six factors are to be considered in determining whether a trade secret exists: (1) the extent to which the information is known outside the business; (2) the extent to which it is known by a business' employees and others involved in the business; (3) the extent of measures taken by a business to guard the secrecy of the information; (4) the value of the information to a business and to its competitors; (5) the amount of effort or money expended by a business in developing the information; and (6) the ease or difficulty with which the information could be properly acquired or duplicated by others. If there has been a voluntary disclosure by the plaintiff, or if the facts pertaining to the matter are a subject of general knowledge in the trade, then any property right has evaporated."

In my view, the nature of record, the area of commerce in which a commercial entity is involved and the presence of the conditions described above that must be found to characterize records as trade secrets would be the factors used to determine the extent to which disclosure would "cause substantial injury to the competitive position" of a commercial enterprise. Therefore, the proper assertion of §87(2)(d) would be dependent upon the facts and, again, the effect of disclosure upon the competitive position of the entity to which the records relate.

Also relevant to the analysis is a recent decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, which, for the first time, considered the phrase "substantial competitive injury" [Encore College Bookstores, Inc. v. Auxiliary Service Corporation of the State University of New York at Farmingdale, 87 NY2d 410(1995)]. In that decision, the Court reviewed the legislative history of the Freedom of Information Law as it pertains to §87(2)(d), and due to the analogous nature of equivalent exemption in the federal Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. §552), it relied in part upon federal judicial precedent.

In its discussion of the issue, the Court stated that:

"FOIL fails to define substantial competitive injury. Nor has this Court previously interpreted the statutory phrase. FOIA, however, contains a similar exemption for 'commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential' (see, 5 USC § 552b)...

"As established in Worthington Compressors v Costle (662 F2d 45, 51 [DC Cir]), whether 'substantial competitive harm' exists for purposes of FOIA's exemption for commercial information turns on the commercial value of the requested information to competitors and the cost of acquiring it through other means. Because the submitting business can suffer competitive harm only if the desired material has commercial value to its competitors, courts must consider how valuable the information will be to the competing business, as well as the resultant damage to the submitting enterprise. Where FOIA disclosure is the sole means by which competitors can obtain the requested information, the inquiry ends here.

"Where, however, the material is available from other sources at little or no cost, its disclosure is unlikely to cause competitive damage to the submitting commercial enterprise. On the other hand, as explained in Worthington:

Because competition in business turns on the relative costs and opportunities faced by members of the same industry, there is a potential windfall for competitors to whom valuable information is released under FOIA. If those competitors are charged only minimal FOIA

retrieval costs for the information, rather than the considerable costs of private reproduction, they may be getting quite a bargain. Such bargains could easily have competitive consequences not contemplated as part of FOIA's principal aim of promoting openness in government (id., 419-420)."

In sum, I believe that the State Insurance Fund could in the context of the preceding remarks be characterized as a commercial entity and therefore, assert §87(2)(d). To the extent that that provision or any other ground for denial may justifiably be asserted in accordance with the preceding commentary, the record sought could, in my opinion, be withheld.

Lastly, the fact that the record may be available to Fund employees via an intranet is irrelevant to public rights of access. Employees receive the record in the performance of their official duties, not as members of the public seeking the record pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law. Further, the record is the property of the Fund and cannot be disclosed by its employees without authorization to do so (see attached Information Security Policy).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Lue-Shing:

I have received your letter of July 23, which reached this office on August 3. You complained that the Division of Parole has repeatedly delayed responding to your requests for records and asked whether there is any method of compelling the Division to comply with the Freedom of Information Law other than through the initiation of litigation.

In this regard, I believe that the Division of Parole seeks to comply with the Freedom of Information Law and carries out its duties in good faith. Further, I am unaware of any means of compelling an agency to comply with law short of initiating litigation and obtaining a judicial order.

I note, however, that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

Mr. Christopher Lue-Shing

that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Mr. Paul Hynard

Dear Mr. Hynard:

I have received your letters of July 26, 27 and 28.

The first pertains to a request for records of the New York City Police Department that has not been answered. In a response to a different matter sent to you yesterday, I offered guidance concerning the time limits for responding to requests and the steps that may be taken. The same information would be applicable in this instance. For your information, the person designated by the Department to determine appeals is Susan Petito, Special Counsel.

The second and third letters deal with unanswered requests for court records. In this regard, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and that §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

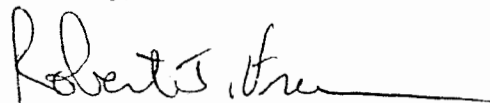

Mr. Paul Hynard

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. Even though other statutes may deal with access to court records, the procedural provisions associated with the Freedom of Information Law (i.e., those involving the designation of a records access officer or the right to appeal a denial) would not ordinarily be applicable.

It is suggested that you resubmit your requests to the clerk of the appropriate court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for your requests.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Logan:

I have received your letter of August 2 and the materials attached to it. You have sought my views concerning rights of access to "statistical data" that may be maintained by the Division of Parole relating to the period of 1995 to 1998.

From my perspective, there are two issues pertinent to your request. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. Consequently, an applicant must supply sufficient detail to enable an agency to locate and identify the records [see Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY2d 245 (1986)]. Having reviewed your request, it is questionable in my view whether or the extent to which you met the standard of reasonably describing the records of your interest. You sought "statistical data depicting inmates who were characterized as violent felony offenders" who were released during the years 1995 to 1998, as well as such data following their first, second or third appearances before the Parole Board. I cannot ascertain on the basis of your request which data you want (i.e., data concerning time served, health condition, whether they had job placements, previous convictions, ethnic breakdowns, number of disciplinary proceedings, etc). In my opinion, it is doubtful that your request is consistent with the aforementioned requirement.

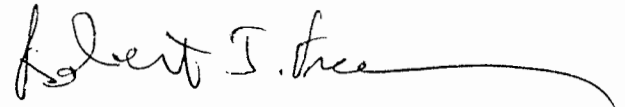

Second, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and §89(3) also states that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, to the extent that the statistical data of your interest has not been prepared and cannot be generated based on the Division's current computer programs, it would not be required to prepare new records or data on your behalf. However, insofar as your request reasonably describes statistical data that is maintained by the Division, I believe that it would be accessible under the Freedom of Information Law, for none of the grounds for denial appearing in §87(2) would be pertinent.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Emanuel Rodriguez
97-A-0208
Southport Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 2000
Pine City, NY 14871

Dear Mr. Rodriguez:

I have received your letter of July 4 and the materials attached to it. As I understand the matter, you gave testimony that was recorded on audiotape concerning an alleged assault by correction officers. Your request for records made to the Office of the Bronx County District Attorney, including your taped testimony, was initially denied, but the denial of was reversed following your appeal. Nevertheless, you were later informed that the District Attorney's office no longer has possession of the audiotape, and that it was forwarded to an investigator at the New York City Department of Correction. Although several requests have been made to that person, you have received no response. Consequently, you have sought assistance in the matter.

In this regard, pursuant to the regulations promulgated by the Committee (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests for records, and requests should ordinarily be sent to that person. While I believe that the recipient of your request should have responded directly in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law or forwarded the request to the appropriate person, it is suggested that you renew your request, describe the situation and send it to Mr. Thomas Antenen, Records Access Officer, Department of Corrections, 60 Hudson Street, 6th Floor, New York, NY 10013.

For future reference, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89 (3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

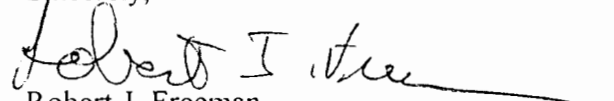

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89 (4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89 (4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. c/o Donart
Freeport, NY 11520

Dear Mr. Lilker:

I have received your letter of July 29 and the materials attached to it. You have raised a variety of issues concerning compliance with the Freedom of Information and Open Meetings Laws by the Village of Freeport.

You referred initially to an appeal that you submitted under the Freedom of Information Law and asked whether the Village sent copies of the proper records to this office as required by §89(4)(a) of that statute. The cited provision states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person thereof designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought. In addition, each agency shall immediately forward to the committee on open government a copy of such appeal and the ensuing determination thereon."

Based on a review of our records relating to appeals for the month of July, the Village apparently did not send the requisite documentation to this office.

Next, you referred to the acknowledgment of the receipt of requests that do not include an approximation of when a request might be granted or denied. Here I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

Mr. Stewart S. Lilker

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, it appears that some aspects of your requests do not meet the requirements imposed by the Freedom of Information Law. In a request of May 28, you asked for all resolutions brought before the Board of Trustees dealing with its rules of procedure, laws, rules, decisions and the like relating to those rules that may be in possession of the Village, and any decisions rendered by this office since 1993.

One issue in relation to the request involves the extent to which the request "reasonably describes" the records sought as required by §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law. I point out that it has been held by the Court of Appeals that to deny a request on the ground that it fails to reasonably describe the records, an agency must establish that "the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

The Court in Konigsberg found that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth and also stated that:

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency']" (id. at 250).

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping system. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

While I am unfamiliar with the recordkeeping systems of the Village, to extent that the records sought can be located with reasonable effort, a request, in my opinion would meet the requirement of reasonably describing the records. On the other hand, if the records are not maintained in a manner that permits their retrieval except by reviewing perhaps hundreds or even thousands of records individually in an effort to locate those falling within the scope of a request, to that extent, the request would not in my opinion meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

If, for example, minutes of meetings are not indexed by subject matter, locating minutes that include reference to a particular subject would likely require a review of all the minutes, line by line, covering the period that you described. In my view, a request of that nature would not "reasonably describe" the records.

Similarly, a request for laws, rules, regulations and the like is not, in my view, a request for records. In essence, it is a request for an interpretation of law requiring a judgment. Any number of provisions of law might be "applicable", and a disclosure of some of them, based on one's knowledge, may be incomplete due to an absence of expertise regarding the content and interpretation of each such law. Further, people, and perhaps attorneys in particular, might differ as to the applicability of a given provision of law. In contrast, if a request is made, for example, for "section 10 of the Village Code", no interpretation or judgment is necessary, for sections of law appear numerically and can readily be identified. That kind of request, in my opinion, would involve a portion of a record that must be disclosed. Again, a request for laws that might be "applicable" is not, in my view, a request for a record as envisioned by the Freedom of Information Law.

Other issues relate to the Open Meetings Law and minutes of meetings. Section 106 pertains to minutes and states that:

" 1. Minutes shall be taken at all open meetings of a public body which shall consist of a record or summary of all motions, proposals, resolutions and any other matter formally voted upon and the vote thereon.

2. Minutes shall be taken at executive sessions of any action that is taken by formal vote which shall consist of a record or summary of the final determination of such action, and the date and vote thereon; provided, however, that such summary need not include any matter which is not required to be made public by the freedom of information law as added by article six of this chapter.

3. Minutes of meetings of all public bodies shall be available to the public in accordance with the provisions of the freedom of information law within two weeks from the date of such meeting except that minutes taken pursuant to subdivision two hereof shall be available to the public within one week from the date of the executive session."

Subdivision (3) deals specifically with the time within which minutes must be prepared and made available, a period of two weeks with respect to minutes of open meetings, and one week when action is taken during executive sessions.

It is emphasized that there is nothing in the Open Meetings Law or any other statute of which I am aware that requires that minutes be approved. Nevertheless, as a matter of practice or policy, many public bodies approve minutes of their meetings. In the event that minutes have not been approved, to comply with the Open Meetings Law, it has consistently been advised that minutes be prepared and made available within two weeks, and that if the minutes have not been approved, they may be marked "unapproved", "draft" or "non-final", for example. By so doing within the requisite time limitations, the public can generally know what transpired at a meeting; concurrently, the public is effectively notified that the minutes are subject to change. If minutes have been prepared within less than two weeks, I believe that those unapproved minutes would be available as soon as they exist, and that they may be marked in the manner described above.

Further, in my opinion, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, and if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure.

Lastly, one of the issues relates to matters involving a real property transaction, and the pertinent provision concerning the ability to conduct an executive session to discuss such matters is §105(1)(h). That provision permits a public body to enter into executive session to discuss:

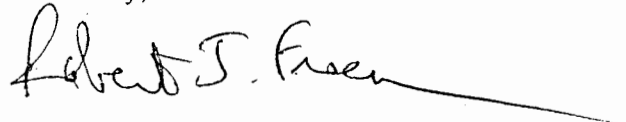

"the proposed acquisition, sale or lease of real property or the proposed acquisition of securities, or sale or exchange of securities held by such public body, but only when publicity would substantially affect the value thereof."

In my opinion, the language quoted above, like the other grounds for entry into executive session, is based on the principle that public business must be discussed in public unless public discussion would in some way be damaging, either to an individual, for example, or to a government in terms of its capacity to perform its functions appropriately and in the best interest of the public. It is clear that §105(1)(h) does not permit public bodies to conduct executive sessions to discuss all matters that may relate to the transaction of real property; only to the extent that publicity would "substantially affect the value of the property" can that provision validly be asserted.

If indeed publicity would substantially affect the value of real property, records, i.e., minutes of executive sessions, could likely be withheld in accordance with §106(2) of the Open Meetings Law to the extent authorized by §87(2)(c) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision permits an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure "would impair present or imminent contract awards..." As in the case of the rationale of §105(1)(h) of the Open Meetings Law, the cited provision of the Freedom of Information Law in my view authorizes an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure would place a government agency at a disadvantage in negotiations or would otherwise preclude the agency from engaging in an agreement optimal to taxpayers.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Bennett:

I have received your letter of August 3 in which you wrote that you have encountered difficulty in obtaining your arrest record from the City of Lockport Police Department. You indicated that you must send a "signed release statement notarized" and the reason for the request "along with a $10.00 fee." Although you met those conditions, you stated that you had received no further response as of the date of your letter to this office.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, the reason for making a request is irrelevant, and it has been held that records accessible under the Freedom of Information Law must be made equally available to any person, regardless of the status or interest of the person making the request [M. Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health and Hosps. Corp., 62 NY 2d 75 (1984), Burke v. Yudelson, 368 NYS 2d 779, aff'd 51 AD 2d 673, 378 NYS 2d 165 (1976)]. If the request involves materials that could be withheld from the public generally on the ground that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" but which would be available to you as the subject of the materials, the agency could require that you provide reasonable proof of your identity [see Freedom of Information Law, §89(2)(c)], such as a notarized statement proving your identity.

Second, assuming that your request involves a copy of an existing record, the Freedom of Information Law, §87(1)(b)(iii), limits the fee that can be charged to twenty-five cents per photocopy up to nine by fourteen inches.

Lastly, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Majette:

I have received two letters from you, and you requested records from this office in both.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not maintain custody or control of records generally. In short, I cannot provide the records in which you are interested because this office does not possess them.

For future reference, when seeking records, a request should be made to the agency that you believe maintains them. In view of the nature of your requests, it would appear that the records are kept at your facility. If that is so, I note that the regulations promulgated by the Department of Correctional Services indicate that a request for records kept at a correctional facility should be made to the facility superintendent or his designee.

In addition, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records and that §89(3) states in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. In the context of your request, if, for instance, the Department does not maintain "a list of employees designated by the Commissioner" to conduct certain hearings, it would not be required to create such a list on your behalf.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Bunker:

I have received your letter of August 30 in which you requested a subject matter list pertaining to you.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not maintain custody or control of records generally. In short, I cannot provide the record that you are seeking because this office does not possess it.

Further, while each agency is required to maintain a subject matter list, there is no requirement that such a list be prepared or maintained with respect to particular individuals.

By way of background, as you may be aware, §87(3)(c) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that each agency maintain:

"a reasonably detailed current list by subject matter, of all records in the possession of the agency, whether or not available under this article."

The subject matter list is not, in my opinion, required to identify each and every record of an agency; rather I believe that it must refer, by category and in reasonable detail, to the kinds of records maintained by an agency. Again, a subject matter list is not prepared with respect to records pertaining to a single individual.

Reference to the subject matter list is made in the regulations promulgated by the Department of Correctional Services, which in §5.13 state that:

September 3, 1999

"(a) Every custodian of records under these regulations shall maintain an up-to-date subject matter list, reasonably detailed, of all records in their possession. The records access officer shall maintain a master index, reasonably detailed, of all records maintained by the department. The master index shall include the lists kept by all custodians as well as a list of records maintained at the department's central office.

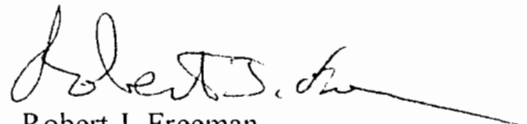

(b) Each subject matter list and the master index shall be sufficiently detailed to permit identification of the file category of the record sought.

(c) The master index shall be updated not less than twice per year. The most recent update shall appear on the first page of the subject matter list. Each custodian of records and the records access officer shall make available the index kept by him for inspection and copying. Any person desiring a copy of such list may request in writing a copy and upon payment of the appropriate fee, unless waived, a copy of such list shall be mailed or delivered."

Based on the foregoing, it is clear in my view that a master list must be maintained and made available at each facility. By reviewing a subject matter list, you can ascertain the kinds of records maintained by an agency and thereafter, request records based upon your review of the list.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Paul Archer
99-B-0679
Gowanda Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 311
Gowanda, NY 14070-0311

Dear Mr. Archer:

I have received your letter of August 25 in which you appealed a denial of access to records by the Commission of Correction to this office.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to determine appeals and cannot compel an agency to grant or deny access to records.

The provision dealing with the right to appeal a denial of access to records is found in §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Further, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), which govern the procedural aspects of the Law, state that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation or the head, chief executive or governing body of other agencies shall hear appeals or shall designate a person or body to hear appeals regarding denial of access to records under the Freedom of Information Law.

Mr. Paul Archer

(b) Denial of access shall be in writing stating the reason therefor and advising the person denied access of his or her right to appeal to the person or body established to hear appeals, and that person or body shall be identified by name, title, business address and business telephone number. The records access officer shall not be the appeals officer" (section 1401.7).

It is noted that the state's highest court has held that a failure to inform a person denied access to records of the right to appeal enables that person to seek judicial review of a denial. Citing the Committee's regulations and the Freedom of Information Law, the Court of Appeals in Barrett v. Morgenthau held that:

"[i]nasmuch as the District Attorney failed to advise petitioner of the availability of an administrative appeal in the office (see, 21 NYCRR 1401.7[b]) and failed to demonstrate in the proceeding that the procedures for such an appeal had, in fact, even been established (see, Public Officers Law [section] 87[1][b], he cannot be heard to complain that petitioner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies" [74 NY 2d 907, 909 (1989)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Richard E. Slagle
Planing Board Chairman
Town of Celoron
21 Boulevard Avenue
Celoron, NY 14720

Dear Mr. Slagle:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of August 5. Please accept my apologies for the delay in response.

You have raised questions concerning the status of "work sessions" under the Open Meetings Law, the right of the public to speak at meetings, and the ability to gain access to records of a volunteer fire company. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, there is no legal distinction between a work session and a meeting. By way of background, it is noted that the definition of "meeting" has been broadly interpreted by the courts. In a landmark decision rendered in 1978, the Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, found that any gathering of a quorum of a public body for the purpose of conducting public business is a "meeting" that must be convened open to the public, whether or not there is an intent to take action and regardless of the manner in which a gathering may be characterized [see Orange County Publications v. Council of the City of Newburgh, 60 AD 2d 409, aff'd 45 NY 2d 947 (1978)].

I point out that the decision rendered by the Court of Appeals was precipitated by contentions made by public bodies that so-called "work sessions" and similar gatherings held for the purpose of discussion, but without an intent to take action, fell outside the scope of the Open Meetings Law. In discussing the issue, the Appellate Division, whose determination was unanimously affirmed by the Court of Appeals, stated that: document. Every step of the decision-making process, including the decision itself, is a necessary preliminary to formal action. Formal acts have always been matters of public record and the public has always been made aware of how its officials have voted on an issue. There would be no need for this law if this was all the Legislature intended. Obviously, every thought, as well as every affirmative act of a public official as it relates to and is within the scope of one's official duties is a matter of public concern. It is the entire decision-making process that the Legislature intended to affect by the enactment of this statute" (60 AD 2d 409, 415).

"We believe that the Legislature intended to include more than the mere formal act of voting or the formal execution of an official

The court also dealt with the characterization of meetings as "informal," stating that:

"The word 'formal' is defined merely as 'following or according with established form, custom, or rule' (Webster's Third New Int. Dictionary). We believe that it was inserted to safeguard the rights of members of a public body to engage in ordinary social transactions, but not to permit the use of this safeguard as a vehicle by which it precludes the application of the law to gatherings which have as their true purpose the discussion of the business of a public body" (id.).

Based upon the direction given by the courts, if a majority of a public body gathers to discuss public business, any such gathering, in my opinion, would ordinarily constitute a "meeting" subject to the Open Meetings Law that must be preceded by notice given in accordance with §104 of the Law.

Unless a public body has adopted a rule to the contrary, it may take action at a work session. With respect to minutes of work sessions and other meetings, the Open Meetings Law contains what might be viewed as minimum requirements concerning the contents of minutes. Specifically, §106 of the Open Meetings Law states that:

1. Minutes shall be taken at all open meetings of a public body which shall consist of a record or summary of all motions, proposals, resolutions and any other matter formally voted upon and the vote thereon.

2. Minutes shall be taken at executive sessions of any action that is taken by formal vote which shall consist of a record or summary of the final determination of such action, and the date and vote thereon; provided, however, that such summary need not include any matter which is not required to be made public by the freedom of information law as added by article six of this chapter.

3. Minutes of meetings of all public bodies shall be available to the public in accordance with the provisions of the freedom of information law within two weeks from the date of such meetings except that minutes taken pursuant to subdivision two hereof shall be available to the public within one week from the date of the executive session."

Based upon the foregoing, it is clear in my view that minutes need not consist of a verbatim account of what was said at a meeting; similarly, there is no requirement that minutes refer to every topic discussed or identify those who may have spoken. Although a public body may choose to prepare expansive minutes, at a minimum, minutes of open meetings must include reference to all motions, proposals, resolutions and any other matters upon which votes are taken. If those kinds of actions, such as motions or votes, do not occur during workshops, technically I do not believe that minutes must be prepared.

Second, the Open Meetings Law clearly provides the public with the right "to observe the performance of public officials and attend and listen to the deliberations and decisions that go into the making of public policy" (see Open Meetings Law, §100). However, the Law is silent with respect to the issue of public participation. Consequently, by means of example, if a public body does not want to answer questions or permit the public to speak or otherwise participate at its meetings, I do not believe that it would be obliged to do so. On the other hand, a public body may choose to answer questions and permit public participation, and many do so. When a public body does permit the public to speak, I believe that it should do so based upon reasonable rules that treat members of the public equally.

While public bodies have the right to adopt rules to govern their own proceedings (see e.g., Village Law, §4-412), the courts have found in a variety of contexts that such rules must be reasonable. For example, although a board of education may "adopt by laws and rules for its government and operations", in a case in which a board's rule prohibited the use of tape recorders at its meetings, the Appellate Division found that the rule was unreasonable, stating that the authority to adopt rules "is not unbridled" and that "unreasonable rules will not be sanctioned" [see Mitchell v. Garden City Union Free School District, 113 AD 2d 924, 925 (1985)]. Similarly, if by rule, a public body chose to permit certain citizens to address it for ten minutes while permitting others to address it for three, or not at all, such a rule, in my view, would be unreasonable.

And third, the status of volunteer fire companies had been unclear in the initial stages of the Freedom of Information Law. Those companies are generally not-for-profit corporations that perform their duties by means of contractual relationships with municipalities. As not-for-profit corporations, it was difficult to determine whether or not they conducted public business and performed a governmental function. Nevertheless, in Westchester-Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball [50 NYS 2d 575 (1980)], a case involving access to records relating to a lottery conducted by a volunteer fire company, the Court of Appeals, found that volunteer fire companies, despite their status as not-for-profit corporations, are "agencies" subject to the Freedom of Information Law. In so holding, the Court stated that:

"We begin by rejecting respondent's contention that, in applying the Freedom of Information Law, a distinction is to be made between a volunteer organization on which a local government relies for performance of an essential public service, as is true of the fire department here, and on the other hand, an organic arm of government, when that is the channel through which such services are delivered. Key is the Legislature's own unmistakably broad declaration that, '[a]s state and local government services increase and public problems become more sophisticated and complex and therefore harder to solve, and with the resultant increase in revenues and expenditures, it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' (emphasis added; Public Officers Law, §84).

"True, the Legislature, in separately delineating the powers and duties of volunteer fire departments, for example, has nowhere included an obligation comparable to that spelled out in the Freedom of Information statute (see Village Law, art 10; see, also, 39 NY Jur, Municipal Corporations, §§560-588). But, absent a provision exempting volunteer fire departments from the reach of article 6-and there is none-we attach no significance to the fact that these or other particular agencies, regular or volunteer, are not expressly included. For the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objections cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" (id. at 579).

Moreover, although it was contended that documents concerning the lottery were not subject to the Freedom of Information Law because they did not pertain to the performance of the company's fire fighting duties, the Court held that the documents constituted "records" subject to the Freedom of Information Law [see §86(4)].

More recently, another decision confirmed in an expansive manner that volunteer fire companies are required to be accountable. That decision, S.W. Pitts Hose Company et al. v. Capital Newspapers (Supreme Court, Albany County, January 25, 1988), dealt with the issue in terms of government control over volunteer fire companies. In its analysis, the Court stated that:

"Section 1402 of the Not-for-Profit Corporation Law is directly applicable to the plaintiffs and pertains to how volunteer fire companies are organized. Section 1402(e) provides:

'...a fire corporation, hereafter incorporated under this section shall be under the control of the city, village,

September 3, 1999

fire district or town authorities having by law, control over the prevention or extinguishment of fires therein. Such authorities may adopt rules and regulations for the government and control of such corporations.'

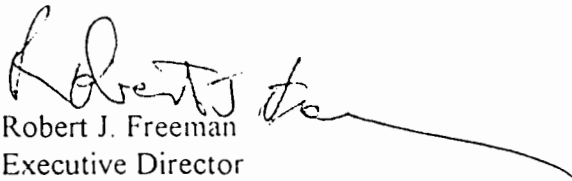

"These fire companies are formed by consent of the Colonie Town Board. The Town has control over the membership of the companies, as well as many other aspects of their structure, organization and operation (section 1402). The plaintiffs' contention that their relationship with the Town of Colonie is solely contractual is a mischaracterization. The municipality clearly has, by law, control over these volunteer organizations which reprovide a public function...

"This court recognizes the long, distinguished history of volunteer fire companies in New York State, and the vital services they provide to many municipalities. But not to be ignored is that their existence is inextricably linked to, dependent on, and under the control of the municipalities for which they provide an essential public service."

In sum, volunteer fire companies are required to disclose pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law in the same manner as municipal agencies.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Judge Kessler:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of July 23 and the correspondence attached to it. You have asked that I review a request made under the Freedom of Information Law and your response to it.

The request, which was made by a law firm, involves "information....concerning applications for zoning variances, approvals and denials thereof, applications for Building Permits, approvals and denials thereof, and actions brought by the Town of Rhinebeck to enforce its Zoning Laws and Building Codes for all years since 1980." The request later specified the kinds of records included within the request, all of which pertain to the period of 1980 to the present, such as complaints received by Town officials concerning "construction, operations or activities in the Town", "pleadings in every enforcement action commenced by the Town....making allegations of violations of the Building Code, the Zoning Law or Building Permits", all citations issued in relation to those provisions and minutes of meetings in which reference is made to applications for zoning variances.

In response, although you agreed to comply to the extent possible, you contended that a request encompassing such a lengthy period, nineteen years, is "unreasonable." The remainder of the response dealt with each aspect of the request and indicated that some records, depending on the means by which they are filed, could be located and made available for inspection or upon payment of the request fees for copying, but that others could not be retrieved without additional identifying information.

First, the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law is extensive, for it includes all "agency records" within its scope. Section 86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, irrespective of the age of a document, if it continues to be maintained by the Town, I believe that it would constitute a "record" that falls within the framework of the Freedom of Information Law [see Capital Newspapers v. Whalen, 69 NY2d 246 (1987)].

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, with one exception, the records sought would appear to be available, for none of the grounds for denial would be applicable. The only category of requested records that would in my opinion include the ability to deny access is complaints. Depending on attendant facts, personally identifying details pertaining to complainants might justifiably be deleted on the ground that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" pursuant to §87(2)(b).

Third, and most importantly, I believe that the key issue involves the extent to which the request "reasonably describes" the records sought as required by §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law. I point out that it has been held by the Court of Appeals that to deny a request on the ground that it fails to reasonably describe the records, an agency must establish that "the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

The Court in Konigsberg found that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth and also stated that:

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency']" (id. at 250).

Hon. Bernard Kessler

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping system. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

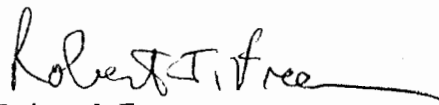

While I am unfamiliar with the recordkeeping systems of the Town, to extent that the records sought can be located with reasonable effort, the request, in my opinion would have met the requirement of reasonably describing the records. On the other hand, if the records are not maintained in a manner that permits their retrieval except by reviewing perhaps hundreds or even thousands of records individually in an effort to locate those falling within the scope of the request, to that extent, the request would not in my opinion meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

In the context of the matter at hand, there are several aspects of the request that do not appear to meet the requirement that the records be "reasonably described." For instance, you indicated that records relating to applications for zoning variances are kept alphabetically, by applicants' names. Since the request seeks the records by means of a time period, chronologically, there would be no way to locate the records other than by reviewing each applicant file to ascertain whether it falls within the scope of the request. Minutes of meetings are apparently not indexed by subject matter, and all minutes for the past nineteen years would have to be reviewed to determine whether they contain information falling within the request. You wrote that violations and citations "are included in general correspondence to and from the Town", and that a "better identification of same would be most helpful."

In those and similar other aspects of the request, I do not believe that the firm seeking the records would have met the standard of reasonably describing the records. In each of those instances, the Town does not maintain the records in a manner that enables Town officials to locate the items within a category of records sought without reviewing virtually every record filed over the course of nineteen years. According to the Court of Appeals in Konigsberg, an agency is not required to engage such extensive searches to locate and retrieve the records.

I hope that I have been of assistance. If you would like to discuss the matter further, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Robles:

I have received your letter of July 23 and the materials attached to it. You have sought my opinion concerning a request for records that you made to the New York City Police Department.

From my perspective, several elements of the request were adequately considered in the opinion addressed to you on March 22. The primary focus of the more recent letter appears to involve records relating to overtime, attendance and a claim of disability by a particular police officer. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Although tangential to the issues raised by your request, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law generally does not require that agencies maintain or prepare records [see §89(3)], but that an exception involves payroll information. Specifically, §87(3) of the Law states in relevant part that:

"Each agency shall maintain...

(b) a record setting forth the name, public office address, title and salary of every officer or employee of the agency..."

While §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law authorizes an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy", the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public employees. First, it is clear that public employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public employees are required to be more accountable than others. Second, with regard to records pertaining to public employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a public employee's official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980); Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977].

Based upon the foregoing, it is clear in my view that records reflective of salaries of public employees must be prepared and made available. Similarly, records reflective of other payments, whether they pertain to overtime, or participation in work-related activities, for example, would be available, for those records in my view would be relevant to the performance of one's official duties.

It is noted that one of the decisions cited above, Capital Newspapers v. Burns, supra, involved a request for records reflective of the days and dates of sick leave claimed by a particular police officer. The Appellate Division found that those records must be disclosed, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. The decision indicates that the public has both economic and safety reasons for knowing whether public employees perform their duties when scheduled to do so. As such, attendance records, including those involving overtime work, are in my opinion clearly available, for they are relevant to the performance of public employees' official duties.

Insofar as the records sought include reference to a particular medical problem or injury, I believe that they may be withheld on the ground that disclosure would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Even though they might not be characterized as medical records, because they contain information that is medical in nature, they may be withheld to that extent [see Hanig v. NYS Department of Motor Vehicles, 79 NY2d 106 (1992)].

Lastly, you requested "a complete itemized inventory" of the records that might be withheld with a justification for the denial of access to each. In my view, the Department would not be required to prepare such an inventory. I am unaware of any provision of the Freedom of Information Law or judicial decision that would require that a denial at the agency level identify every record withheld or include a description of the reason for withholding each document. Such a requirement has been imposed under the federal Freedom of Information Act, which may involve the preparation of a so-called "Vaughn index" [see Vaughn v. Rosen, 484 F.2D 820 (1973)]. Such an index provides an analysis of documents withheld by an agency as a means of justifying a denial and insuring that the burden of proof remains on the agency. Further, one decision suggests the preparation of that kind of analysis might in some instances subvert the purpose for which exemptions are claimed. In that decision, an inmate requested records referring to him as a member of organized crime or an escape risk. In affirming a denial by a lower court, the Appellate Division found that:

"All of these documents were inter-agency or intra-agency materials exempted under Public Officers Law section 87(2)(g) and some were materials the disclosure of which could endanger the lives or safety of certain individuals, and thus were exempted under Public Officers Law section 87(2)(f). The failure of the respondents and the Supreme Court, Westchester County, to disclose the underlying facts contained in these documents so as to establish that they did not fall 'squarely within the ambit of [the] statutory exemptions' (Matter of Farberman & Sons v. New York City Health and Hosps. Corp., 62 NY 2d 75, 83; Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 NY 2d 567, 571), did not constitute error. To make such disclosure would effectively subvert the purpose of these statutory exemptions which is to preserve the confidentiality of this information" [Nalo v. Sullivan, 125 AD 2d 311, 312 (1987)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Crayton:

I have received your letter of July 20. You asked that this office "intervene" on your behalf in connection with your efforts in obtaining records from the Office of the Niagara County Clerk relating to an indictment and its dismissal.

In this regard, first, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to "intervene" in the legal sense or compel an agency to grant or deny access to records.

Second, as I understand the matter, the records in question would likely have been sealed and be beyond public rights of access.

In general, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Relevant to the matter is the initial ground for denial, §87(2)(a), which pertains to records that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". One such statute is §160.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law (CPL). Specifically, subdivision (1) of §160.50 states in relevant part that:

"Upon the termination of a criminal action or proceeding against a person in favor of such person...the record of such action or proceeding shall be sealed and the clerk of the court wherein such

criminal action or proceeding was terminated shall immediately notify the commissioner of the division of criminal justice services and the heads of all appropriate police departments and other law enforcement agencies that the action has been terminated in favor of the accused, and unless the court has directed otherwise, that the record of such action or proceeding has been sealed. Upon receipt of notification of such termination and sealing...

(c) all official records and papers, including judgments and orders of a court but not including published court decisions or opinions or records and briefs on appeal, relating to the arrest or prosecution, including all duplicates and copies thereof, on file with the division of criminal justice services, any court, police agency, or prosecutor's office shall be sealed and not made available to any person or public or private agency..."

Assuming that a court in which a proceeding was heard has not directed otherwise, typically when charges are dismissed in favor of an accused, records of or relating to the charges would be sealed in conjunction with the provisions quoted above. Since the indictment to which you referred was dismissed, it is assumed that the records have been sealed.

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Martin T. Reid
Director of Issue Management
State University of New York
Office of the Vice Chancellor
State University Plaza

Dear Mr. Reid:

I have received your determination of an appeal rendered on July 27 in response to a request made by Samuel B. Golub, M.D. In brief, you determined that certain records could be made available for inspection pursuant to the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act ("FERPA"), but you indicated that FERPA "does not require an educational institution to provide copies of any educational records."

While I agree that FERPA does not provide a right to have copies of records, I believe that the applicant would enjoy such a right under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, as you are aware, the State University of New York clearly constitutes an "agency" as that term is defined in §86(3) of the Freedom of Information Law, and §86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the definition, the materials requested constitute agency records. While they are "education records" subject only to inspection under FERPA, they are also "records" subject to the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law, which states that accessible records must be made available for inspection and copying [§87(2)] and that an agency is required to make copies of those records upon payment of a fee [§89(3)]. I point out, too, that the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government, which have the force and effect of law, state in relevant part that "[a]ny conflicts among laws governing public access to records shall be construed in favor of the widest possible availability of public records" [21 NYCRR §1401.1(d)].

In sum, although FERPA does not confer a right to obtain copies of records accessible under FERPA, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law requires that copies be made available upon payment of the requisite fee.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Bruce E. Baker

Dear Mr. Baker:

I have received your letter of July 26 and the materials attached to it. You have questioned certain responses to your requests made under the Freedom of Information Law to the Hoosick Falls Central School District.

The first issue that you raised involves a request for a copy of a videotape of a meeting. You contend that the District has the resources to reproduce the tape; the Superintendent has indicated that the District does not have the resources to do so and must find an entity outside of the District to prepare a copy. In short, if the Superintendent has stated that the District does not have the ability to reproduce the tape, I have no reason to conclude otherwise.

If the District does not have the capacity to prepare a reproduction and must have a duplicate prepared by a private entity, it could charge a fee based on the "actual cost of reproduction" [see Freedom of Information Law, §87(1)(b)(iii)]. I believe that I discussed the matter with Ms. Chase, and that she informed me that the local entity that could prepare a new tape had no "pricelist". In that event, it is assumed that a bill for services rendered would indicate the payment to that entity. If there are postage or similar charges, they, too, could be included in determining the "actual cost."

Second, it has been advised that when an agency produces copies of records in response to a request but the applicant for the records has not paid the requisite fee, the agency can refuse to honor further requests until the fee is paid.

There is no judicial decision of which I am aware that is pertinent to the matter. However, when a request for copies of records is served upon an agency, both the agency and the applicant bear a responsibility. The agency is responsible for compliance with the Freedom of Information Law by retrieving the records sought and disclosing them to the extent required by law. The agency is also required to produce copies of records "[u]pon payment of, or offer to pay, the fee prescribed therefor" [see Freedom of Information Law, §89(3)]. Concurrently, if the applicant requests copies, I believe that he or she bears the responsibility of paying the appropriate fee.

If an agency has prepared copies of records in good faith and the applicant fails or refuses to pay the fee, I do not believe that the agency would be required to make available those copies that have been prepared. In my view, it follows that an agency should not be required to honor ensuing requests until the applicant has fulfilled his or her responsibility by tendering the fee for copies previously made.

I am unaware of the entirety of the facts in relation to the situation, and the propriety of the District's response would in my view be dependent on its reasonableness in conjunction with the attendant facts.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ronald J. Hall
96-A-5913
Elmira Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 500
Elmira, NY 14902-0500

Dear Mr. Hall:

I have received your letter of July 26 and the materials attached to it. You have sought an opinion concerning your right to obtain records pertaining to certain indictments that apparently led to your conviction from the Office of the Rockland County District Attorney. The request was denied "since the documents you seek pertain to a criminal matter the appeal of which has not yet been exhausted", citing §87(2)(e)(i) and (iii).

Those provisions permit an agency to withhold "records compiled for law enforcement purposes" when disclosure would:

- "(i) interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings....
- (iii) identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation..."

In my view, subparagraph (i), if my understanding of the facts is accurate, would not serve as an appropriate basis for a denial of access. Subparagraph (iii) might properly be asserted to withhold some aspects of the records, but it would not likely justify a blanket denial of your request. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

When an investigation is ongoing, to the extent that disclosure would impair the ability of the government to solve a crime or prosecute offenders, for example, I believe that §87(2)(e)(i) would clearly be applicable. Similarly, premature disclosure of evidentiary material or other records might interfere with a judicial proceeding, in which case, the cited provision might properly be asserted.

In this instance, however, as I understand the matter, the investigation has been completed and you have been convicted. If that is so, the provision at issue would not in my opinion serve as a basis for denial.

In a decision recently rendered by the Appellate Division, Second Department [Pittari v. Pirro, ___AD2d___, NYLJ, August 20, 1999], the case involved a request by an attorney for all records pertaining to the arrest and prosecution of his client while the case was pending and before any determination of guilt or innocence. The Court referred to decisions rendered under the counterpart to the New York statute, the federal Freedom of Information Act (5 USC §552), and found that the exception analogous to §87(2)(e)(i):

“...applies to documents applicable to a pending criminal investigation, since disclosure of such information ‘could result in destruction of evidence, chilling and intimidation of witnesses, and revelation of the scope and nature of the Government’s investigation’ (see, Solar Sources, Inc. v. U.S., 142 F3d 1033, 1039)...

“The determination of the Court of Appeals in Matter of Gould v. New York City Police Dept. (89 NY2d 267, supra) does not contradict this analysis. That case held that complaint follow-up reports (commonly referred to as DD5's) and police activity logs (commonly referred to as memo books) are agency records subject to disclosure under FOIL. The question of whether those records were exempt from disclosure on the ground that disclosure would interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings was not explored (see, Matter of Gould v. New York City Police Dept., supra, at 277). It is apparent in Gould that the petitioners’ criminal proceedings had concluded.

“In the instant case, on the other hand, the petitioner acknowledged in his FOIL requests that the documents requested were ‘pertaining to his arrest and prosecution.’ Nor was there any dispute that the criminal action was pending when the FOIL request was made... Such disclosure during the course of a criminal proceeding would have a chilling effect on the pending prosecution (see, Matter of Huston v. Turkel, 236 AD2d 283; Hawkins v. Kurlander, 98 AD2d 14, 16).”

In my view, the clear implication of the foregoing is that §87(2)(e)(i) is pertinent before a trial, a plea of guilty, a conviction or a dismissal. After those events have occurred, the ability to solve a crime, the destruction of evidence or the intimidation of witnesses, for example, become irrelevant in terms of their impact on a proceeding. In this instance, the request appears to have been made following a conviction but during the pendency of an appeal. In that kind of circumstance, with one exception, I do not believe that the provision at issue may justifiably be asserted. That exception would pertain to the situation in which there may be a number of individuals involved in an investigation and the conviction of or dismissal of charges against one defendant represents one aspect of a larger case involving others in which related investigations or criminal proceedings have not yet resulted in a trial, a plea, a conviction or a dismissal.

The other provision cited in the denial, subparagraph (iii) of §87(2)(e), may be more difficult to analyze. If indeed there may have been confidential sources, I believe that an agency may engage in redactions adequate to prevent the disclosure of information that could be used to identify those persons. However, the phrase "confidential information relating to a criminal investigation" has never been the subject of in depth judicial analysis. In general, it is my belief that the exceptions to rights of access appearing in §87(2) of the Freedom of Information Law are intended to enable the government to prevent or avoid harmful consequences; I do not believe that a court would ordinarily accept an assertion based on §87(2)(e)(iii) as a means of withholding a file in its entirety, particularly after a conviction..

I note that the Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, has stressed that the Freedom of Information Law should be construed expansively. Most recently, in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY 2d 267 (1996)], the Court reiterated its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law, stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the Police Department contended that "complaint follow up reports" could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g), an exception separate from that cited in response to your request. The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276), and stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, stating that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink vl. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

Lastly, other grounds for denial and considerations may also be pertinent, and it appears that you addressed them in the "discussion" portion of your appeal.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Hernand Vasquez

Orleans Correctional Facility

Dear Mr. Vasquez:

I have received your letter of July 26, as well as the materials attached to this office. You indicated that you requested information pertaining to property held during your incarceration at the Queens House of Detention, and you "appealed" to this office in an effort to resolve the matter and asked that I provide the information in question.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide and guidance concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to compel an agency to grant or deny access to records, and it does not have custody or control of records generally. In short, I cannot make the information of your interest available because this office does not possess it.

Second, pursuant to the regulations promulgated by the Committee (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests for records, and requests should ordinarily be sent to that person. While I believe that the recipient of your request should have responded directly in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law or forwarded the request to the appropriate person, it is suggested that you renew your request and send it to Mr. Thomas Antenen, Records Access Officer, Department of Corrections, 60 Hudson Street, 6th Floor, New York, NY 10013.

Lastly, for future reference, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record

Mr. Hernand Vasquez

reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

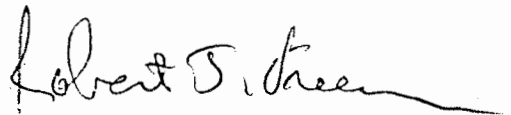

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Phil Christie

Dear Mr. Christie:

I have received your letter of July 28 and the materials relating to it. You requested records from the Bedford Central School District that include its bank account numbers. The District indicated that the bank account numbers are "confidential" and that they must be deleted, and that you would be charged for copies from which the deletions would be made.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

From my perspective, the only ground for denial of potential relevance is §87(2)(i), which authorizes an agency to withhold "computer access codes". Based on its legislative history, that provision is intended to permit agencies to withhold access codes which if disclosed would provide the recipient of a code with the ability to gain unauthorized access to information. Insofar as disclosure would enable a person with an access code to gain access to information without the authority to do so, or to shift, add, delete or alter information, i.e., to make "electronic transfers", I believe that the bank account numbers could justifiably be withheld. On the other hand, if disclosure would not permit an individual to gain unauthorized access information or the ability to alter the information, §87(2)(i) would not likely be applicable. In that event, the records would be available in their entirety, and you would have the right to inspect them at no charge.

Second, assuming that the District may properly delete the bank account numbers, I do not believe that you would have the right to inspect the records, for they include information that you have no right to see. The District could in that circumstance seek payment of the requisite fee for photocopies, which would be made available after the deletion of the bank account numbers (see Van Ness v. Center for Animal Care and Control and the New York City Department of Health, Supreme Court, New York County, January 28, 1999).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Henriquez:

I have received your letter of July 26 concerning unanswered requests made under the Freedom of Information Law. You have raised questions concerning the matter, and in this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, while there is no agency that is empowered to enforce the Freedom of Information Law, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to offer advice and opinions pertaining to that statute.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

Mr. Michael Henriquez

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Third, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since you wrote that you are attempting to obtain "the location and present name" of a particular woman, I note that home addresses of members of the public may generally be withheld pursuant to §87(2)(b) on the ground that disclosure would result in "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Bouros:

I have received your letter of July 24 in which you sought assistance concerning an unanswered request for records maintained at the Riker's Island Correctional Facility.

In this regard, pursuant to the regulations promulgated by the Committee (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests for records, and requests should ordinarily be sent to that person. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

Mr. Victor Iadarola
94-A-5290
Fishkill Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 1245
Beacon, NY 12508

Dear Mr. Iadarola:

I have received your letter of July 27 and the materials attached to it. You have asked that I review them and "make a finding whether the information should be released" to you.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to advise with respect to the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to issue a "finding" that is binding or to compel an agency to grant or deny access to records. Nevertheless, based on a review of the correspondence, I offer the following comments.

First, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Since I am unaware of the contents of the records sought or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot advise as to the extent you may have a right of access to them. However, there are several grounds for denial that may be pertinent. For instance, §87(2)(b) permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy"; §87(2)(e)(iii) and (iv) provide, respectively, that an agency may withhold records compiled for law enforcement purposes when disclosure involves "confidential information relating to a criminal investigation" or would reveal other than routine criminal investigative techniques or procedures; and §87(2)(f) authorizes an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person." It is possible that those exceptions, depending on attendant circumstances, the contents of the records, and the effects of disclosure, might properly be asserted.

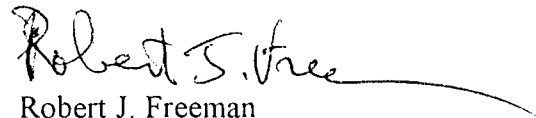

Mr. Victor Iadarola

Dear Mr. Hynard:

I have received your letter of July 26 and the correspondence attached to it. You have asked that this office notify the Office of the New York County District Attorney and the United States Customs Service of their duty to respond to requests for records.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is a New York State agency authorized to provide advice concerning the New York Freedom of Information Law. That statute is applicable to entities of state and local government in New York. The Customs Service is a federal agency that falls within the coverage of the federal Freedom of Information Act (5 USC 552). As such, issues pertaining to compliance with the federal Act are beyond the jurisdiction of the Committee.

Having communicated with the Office of the New York County District Attorney on many occasions, I am sure that its staff is fully familiar with the provisions of the Freedom of Information Law. Nevertheless for your knowledge and future reference, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

Mr. Burnie Daniels

Dear Mr. Daniels:

I have received your letter of July 26 concerning an unanswered request made under the Freedom of Information Law to the records access officer at the Ontario County Jail. You have asked that I contact the Jail on your behalf to ask why your request has not been answered. While I will not do so, I offer the following comments and will send this response to the County Jail.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

Mr. Burnie Daniels

who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

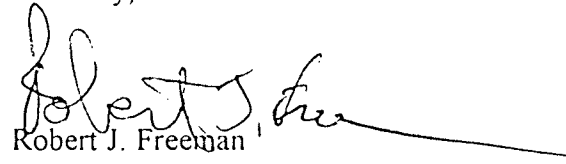

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Second, in the event that no inventory of materials kept by the Jail law library is maintained, you asked that such a list be compiled. Here I point out that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and that §89(3) of that statute provides in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, if no inventory exists, there would be no obligation on the part of Jail staff to prepare an inventory on your behalf.

Lastly, the same provision requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. If the invoices that you requested are kept or filed in a particular area and can be located and identified with reasonable effort, I believe that that aspect of your request would reasonably describe the records. If, however, the invoices are filed with all other County invoices and are kept in chronological order, for example, locating those of your interest would involve reviewing every invoice pertaining to a two year period. In that situation, the request would not, in my view, meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Richard A. Brinson

Dear Mr. Brinson:

I have received your letter of August 3 pertaining to the advisory opinion prepared on July 27 in response to your inquiry. Although you presented additional information, I do not believe that the outcome would be significantly different, even if your contentions are accurate.

The issue involved a request for a "market appraisal", and I referred to two grounds for denial pertinent to ascertaining rights of access, paragraphs (c) and (g) of §87(2) of the Freedom of Information Law. Your comments focus on the former and your contention that since an agreement had been reached, any impairment of the ability of the government agency to reach an optimal agreement would become irrelevant. While that may be so, the other ground for denial remains applicable. Again, under §87(2)(g), those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials consisting of opinions, recommendations, advice and the like may be withheld. By its nature, an appraisal consists, at least in substantial part, of opinions. That being so, even if §87(2)(c) no longer applies, those portions of the record sought may in my view continue to be withheld.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the Freedom of Information Law.

Ms. Kathy Hovis

Dear Ms. Hovis:

I have received your correspondence of August 9 and the materials attached to it. You have asked that I comment with respect to a contention by the Tompkins County District Attorney that autopsy reports are "confidential" and that "[u]nauthorized disclosure...violates the law..."

While autopsy reports and related records are not accessible as of right to the public generally, based on a review of the applicable statute, I do not believe that disclosure of those records would constitute a violation of law or that there is any prohibition against disclosure.

In his letter to the Tompkins County Medical Examiner, the District Attorney referred to §677(3)(b) of the County Law, which pertains to autopsy reports and related records and states that:

"Such records shall be open to inspection by the district attorney of the county. Upon application of the personal representative, spouse or next of kin of the deceased to the coroner or the medical examiner, a copy of the autopsy report, as described in subdivision two of this section shall be furnished to such applicant. Upon proper application of any person who is or may be affected in a civil or criminal action by the contents of the record of any investigation, or upon application of any person having a substantial interest therein, an order may be made by a court of record, or by a justice of the supreme court, that the record of that investigation be made available for his inspection, or that a transcript thereof be furnished to him, or both."

Based upon the foregoing, the Freedom of Information Law in my opinion is inapplicable as a basis for seeking or obtaining an autopsy report or other records described in §677, for the right to obtain such records is based solely on §677(3)(b). In my view, only a district attorney and the next of kin of the deceased have a right of access to records subject to §677; any others would be required to obtain a court order based on demonstration of substantial interest in the records to gain a right of access.

Nevertheless, a careful reading of the provision quoted above indicates that nothing in its terms prohibits a coroner, a medical examiner, a district attorney or others from disclosing the records falling within its coverage. In my experience, there have been numerous situations in which coroners and medical examiners, as well as district attorneys and police departments, have asserted their discretionary authority to disclose records falling within the scope of §677(3)(b), even though there was no obligation to do so.

In my view, a finding that records are confidential and cannot be disclosed must be consistent with the specific and unequivocal language of a statute. For example, and for the purpose of comparing the language of § 677(3)(b) of the County Law with another provision of the County Law, I believe that §308(4) is a statute that prohibits disclosure and leaves no discretion to the agency that maintains the records falling within its scope. The cited provision states that:

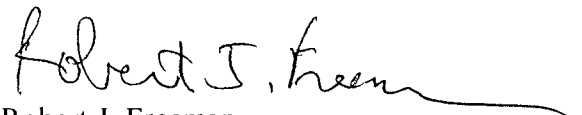

"Records, in whatever form they may be kept, of calls made to a municipality's E911 system shall not be made available to or obtained by any entity or person, other than that municipality's public safety agency, another government agency or body, or a private entity or a person providing medical, ambulance or other emergency services, and shall not be utilized for any commercial purpose other than the provision of emergency services."

Section 677(3)(b) provides a right of access to certain persons, but nowhere specifies that disclosures to others is prohibited. In contrast, §308(4) states that certain records "shall not be made available" except in specified circumstances.

In sum, while the news media and the general public may have no right to autopsy reports and related records, there is nothing in the law which in my view precludes a government official or agency from disclosing those records.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. William V. Camfield
Turning Point Enterprises
Schaghticoke, NY 12154

Dear Mr. Camfield:

I have received your letter of August 3 and the materials relating to it. You described a series of frustrations involving your efforts in gaining information from the Town of Stillwater. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, with respect to your recent requests for an "itemized accounting", it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. Section 89(3) of that statute states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, if no itemized accounting exists, there would be no obligation on the part of the Town to prepare such a record on your behalf. Similarly, if there is no record indicating the status of a certain account on a given date, there would be no requirement that the Town create a record containing the information sought.

Second, insofar as records exist, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, to the extent that the information that you are seeking exists in the form of a record or records, it would appear to be available, for none of the grounds for denial would be pertinent.

Third, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law applies to all agency records, irrespective of the location in which they are maintained. Section 86(4) of the Law defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, in addition to records held by Town officials, records maintained for the Town by the engineering firm to which you referred would also fall within the scope of the Freedom of Information Law.

Lastly, in view of the delays that you have encountered, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

If a request is voluminous and a significant amount of time is needed to locate records and review them to determine rights of access, a delay beyond five business days, in view of those and perhaps the other kinds of factors mentioned earlier, might be reasonable. On the other hand, if a record or report is clearly public and can be found easily, there would appear to be no rational basis for delaying disclosure. In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Nolen:

I have received your letters of July 7, both of which reached this office on August 2. As suggested in other recent correspondence, please note the zip code of this office.

With respect to the first letter, the issue relates to §87(3)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which requires that “[e]ach agency shall maintain...a record setting forth the name, public office address, title and salary of every officer or employee of the agency....” You indicated that the Town of Dannemora has contended that it may provide a post office address for all its employees, rather than a work location. You questioned whether that would satisfy the requirement that a “public office address” be included in the record required to be maintained pursuant to the cited provision. You also questioned the use of nicknames or initials.

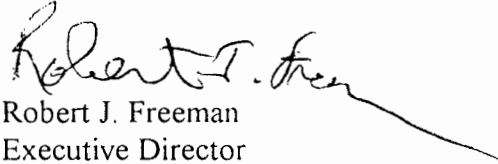

In this regard, as you may recall, the manner in which names appear on the record in question was considered some time ago in an opinion that you sought. The issue relative to the address has not arisen. However, I do not believe that providing a post office box for all employees would meet the requirement imposed by the law. In my view, one’s “public office address” is the location at which a public employee is routinely stationed on where his or her usual office is located.

In conjunction with the second letter, enclosed as requested are the latest supplement to the Committee’s annual report and copies of letters sent to you since the beginning of this year.

Dear Mr. Jones:

I have received your undated letter, which reached this office on August 2. You indicated that the receipt of a request for records of the New York City Police Department was acknowledged and that you were informed that a response would be rendered in approximately 120 days. You wrote that you need the records to perfect your appeal and you asked that the response to your request be "expedited."

In this regard, there is no provision in the Freedom of Information Law that requires an agency to expedite its response to a request or give a preference when records are to be used in a judicial proceeding. I note that the statute provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89 (3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

While an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. Mr. O. Shelly

Dear Mr. Shelly:

I have received your letter of August 1 in which you sought an opinion concerning access to a portion of the State Insurance Fund's Claims-Medical Department Procedures Manual that you characterized as "Procedure 90." You referred to the exceptions in the Freedom of Information Law pertaining to inter-agency and intra-agency materials and to trade secrets, and you contended that neither would apply. In addition, you indicated that the Manual is available to many agency employees on an intranet.

In this regard, while I am unfamiliar with the contents of Procedure 90, an analogous issue has arisen in the past, and as you inferred, the provision of primary significance is §87(2)(d) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are trade secrets or are submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise or derived from information obtained from a commercial enterprise and which if disclosed would cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the subject enterprise."

I agree with your contention that the State Insurance Fund ("the Fund") "does not regulate business." Your reference, however, to §89(5) is misplaced, for that provision deals with the protection of records submitted by commercial enterprises to state agencies. In this instance, the record at issue is a portion of a manual apparently prepared by the Fund.

As I understand its functions, the Fund essentially operates as an insurance company in competition with other insurance carriers licensed to do business in the state. While the Fund as a state agency is not typical of commercial enterprises, my understanding is that, in many respects, it carries out many of its duties as an entity in competition with private firms in the insurance industry.

Most pertinent to the matter, I note that there is case law indicating that when a governmental entity performs functions essentially commercial in nature in competition with private, profit making entities, it may withhold records pursuant to §87(2)(d) in appropriate circumstances (Syracuse & Oswego Motor Lines, Inc. v. Frank, Sup. Ct., Onondaga Cty., October 15, 1985). In this instance, assuming that the Fund is engaged in competition with private firms engaged in the same area of commercial activity, I believe that §87(2)(d) would serve as a potential basis for a denial of access.

The question under §87(2)(d) involves the extent, if any, to which disclosure would "cause substantial injury to the competitive position" of a commercial entity. The concept and parameters of what might constitute a "trade secret" were discussed in Kewanee Oil Co. v. Bicron Corp., which was decided by the United States Supreme Court in 1973 (416 U.S. 470). Central to the issue was a definition of "trade secret" upon which reliance is often based. Specifically, the Court cited the Restatement of Torts, section 757, comment b (1939), which states that:

"[a] trade secret may consist of any formula, pattern, device or compilation of information which is used in one's business, and which gives him an opportunity to obtain an advantage over competitors who do not know or use it. It may be a formula for a chemical compound, a process of manufacturing, treating or preserving materials, a pattern for a machine or other device, or a list of customers" (id. at 474, 475).

In its review of the definition, the court stated that "[T]he subject of a trade secret must be secret, and must not be of public knowledge or of a general knowledge in the trade or business" (id.). The phrase "trade secret" is more extensively defined in 104 NY Jur 2d 234 to mean:

"...a formula, process, device or compilation of information used in one's business which confers a competitive advantage over those in similar businesses who do not know it or use it. A trade secret, like any other secret, is something known to only one or a few and kept from the general public, and not susceptible to general knowledge. Six factors are to be considered in determining whether a trade secret exists: (1) the extent to which the information is known outside the business; (2) the extent to which it is known by a business' employees and others involved in the business; (3) the extent of measures taken by a business to guard the secrecy of the information; (4) the value of the information to a business and to its competitors; (5) the amount of effort or money expended by a business in developing the information; and (6) the ease or difficulty with which the information could be properly acquired or duplicated by others. If there has been a voluntary disclosure by the plaintiff, or if the facts pertaining to the matter are a subject of general knowledge in the trade, then any property right has evaporated."

In my view, the nature of record, the area of commerce in which a commercial entity is involved and the presence of the conditions described above that must be found to characterize records as trade secrets would be the factors used to determine the extent to which disclosure would "cause substantial injury to the competitive position" of a commercial enterprise. Therefore, the proper assertion of §87(2)(d) would be dependent upon the facts and, again, the effect of disclosure upon the competitive position of the entity to which the records relate.

Also relevant to the analysis is a recent decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, which, for the first time, considered the phrase "substantial competitive injury" [Encore College Bookstores, Inc. v. Auxiliary Service Corporation of the State University of New York at Farmingdale, 87 NY2d 410(1995)]. In that decision, the Court reviewed the legislative history of the Freedom of Information Law as it pertains to §87(2)(d), and due to the analogous nature of equivalent exemption in the federal Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. §552), it relied in part upon federal judicial precedent.

In its discussion of the issue, the Court stated that:

"FOIL fails to define substantial competitive injury. Nor has this Court previously interpreted the statutory phrase. FOIA, however, contains a similar exemption for 'commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential' (see, 5 USC § 552[b][4])...

"As established in Worthington Compressors v Costle (662 F2d 45, 51 [DC Cir]), whether 'substantial competitive harm' exists for purposes of FOIA's exemption for commercial information turns on the commercial value of the requested information to competitors and the cost of acquiring it through other means. Because the submitting business can suffer competitive harm only if the desired material has commercial value to its competitors, courts must consider how valuable the information will be to the competing business, as well as the resultant damage to the submitting enterprise. Where FOIA disclosure is the sole means by which competitors can obtain the requested information, the inquiry ends here.

"Where, however, the material is available from other sources at little or no cost, its disclosure is unlikely to cause competitive damage to the submitting commercial enterprise. On the other hand, as explained in Worthington:

Because competition in business turns on the relative costs and opportunities faced by members of the same industry, there is a potential windfall for competitors to whom valuable information is released under FOIA. If those competitors are charged only minimal FOIA

retrieval costs for the information, rather than the considerable costs of private reproduction, they may be getting quite a bargain. Such bargains could easily have competitive consequences not contemplated as part of FOIA's principal aim of promoting openness in government (id., 419-420)."

In sum, I believe that the State Insurance Fund could in the context of the preceding remarks be characterized as a commercial entity and therefore, assert §87(2)(d). To the extent that that provision or any other ground for denial may justifiably be asserted in accordance with the preceding commentary, the record sought could, in my opinion, be withheld.

Lastly, the fact that the record may be available to Fund employees via an intranet is irrelevant to public rights of access. Employees receive the record in the performance of their official duties, not as members of the public seeking the record pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law. Further, the record is the property of the Fund and cannot be disclosed by its employees without authorization to do so (see attached Information Security Policy).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Lue-Shing:

I have received your letter of July 23, which reached this office on August 3. You complained that the Division of Parole has repeatedly delayed responding to your requests for records and asked whether there is any method of compelling the Division to comply with the Freedom of Information Law other than through the initiation of litigation.

In this regard, I believe that the Division of Parole seeks to comply with the Freedom of Information Law and carries out its duties in good faith. Further, I am unaware of any means of compelling an agency to comply with law short of initiating litigation and obtaining a judicial order.

I note, however, that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

Dear Mr. Hynard:

I have received your letters of July 26, 27 and 28.

The first pertains to a request for records of the New York City Police Department that has not been answered. In a response to a different matter sent to you yesterday, I offered guidance concerning the time limits for responding to requests and the steps that may be taken. The same information would be applicable in this instance. For your information, the person designated by the Department to determine appeals is Susan Petito, Special Counsel.

The second and third letters deal with unanswered requests for court records. In this regard, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and that §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

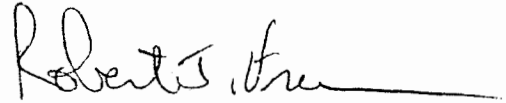

Mr. Paul Hynard

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. Even though other statutes may deal with access to court records, the procedural provisions associated with the Freedom of Information Law (i.e., those involving the designation of a records access officer or the right to appeal a denial) would not ordinarily be applicable.

It is suggested that you resubmit your requests to the clerk of the appropriate court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for your requests.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Logan:

I have received your letter of August 2 and the materials attached to it. You have sought my views concerning rights of access to "statistical data" that may be maintained by the Division of Parole relating to the period of 1995 to 1998.

From my perspective, there are two issues pertinent to your request. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. Consequently, an applicant must supply sufficient detail to enable an agency to locate and identify the records [see Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY2d 245 (1986)]. Having reviewed your request, it is questionable in my view whether or the extent to which you met the standard of reasonably describing the records of your interest. You sought "statistical data depicting inmates who were characterized as violent felony offenders" who were released during the years 1995 to 1998, as well as such data following their first, second or third appearances before the Parole Board. I cannot ascertain on the basis of your request which data you want (i.e., data concerning time served, health condition, whether they had job placements, previous convictions, ethnic breakdowns, number of disciplinary proceedings, etc). In my opinion, it is doubtful that your request is consistent with the aforementioned requirement.

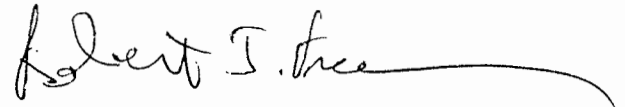

Second, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and §89(3) also states that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, to the extent that the statistical data of your interest has not been prepared and cannot be generated based on the Division's current computer programs, it would not be required to prepare new records or data on your behalf. However, insofar as your request reasonably describes statistical data that is maintained by the Division, I believe that it would be accessible under the Freedom of Information Law, for none of the grounds for denial appearing in §87(2) would be pertinent.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Emanuel Rodriguez

Southport Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 2000
Pine City, NY 14871

Dear Mr. Rodriguez:

I have received your letter of July 4 and the materials attached to it. As I understand the matter, you gave testimony that was recorded on audiotape concerning an alleged assault by correction officers. Your request for records made to the Office of the Bronx County District Attorney, including your taped testimony, was initially denied, but the denial of was reversed following your appeal. Nevertheless, you were later informed that the District Attorney's office no longer has possession of the audiotape, and that it was forwarded to an investigator at the New York City Department of Correction. Although several requests have been made to that person, you have received no response. Consequently, you have sought assistance in the matter.

In this regard, pursuant to the regulations promulgated by the Committee (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests for records, and requests should ordinarily be sent to that person. While I believe that the recipient of your request should have responded directly in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law or forwarded the request to the appropriate person, it is suggested that you renew your request, describe the situation and send it to Mr. Thomas Antenen, Records Access Officer, Department of Corrections, 60 Hudson Street, 6th Floor, New York, NY 10013.

For future reference, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89 (3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

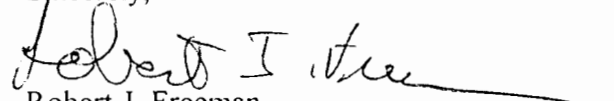

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89 (4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89 (4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Stewart S. Lilker
c/o Donart
Freeport, NY 11520

Dear Mr. Lilker:

I have received your letter of July 29 and the materials attached to it. You have raised a variety of issues concerning compliance with the Freedom of Information and Open Meetings Laws by the Village of Freeport.

You referred initially to an appeal that you submitted under the Freedom of Information Law and asked whether the Village sent copies of the proper records to this office as required by §89(4)(a) of that statute. The cited provision states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person thereof designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought. In addition, each agency shall immediately forward to the committee on open government a copy of such appeal and the ensuing determination thereon."

Based on a review of our records relating to appeals for the month of July, the Village apparently did not send the requisite documentation to this office.

Next, you referred to the acknowledgment of the receipt of requests that do not include an approximation of when a request might be granted or denied. Here I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, it appears that some aspects of your requests do not meet the requirements imposed by the Freedom of Information Law. In a request of May 28, you asked for all resolutions brought before the Board of Trustees dealing with its rules of procedure, laws, rules, decisions and the like relating to those rules that may be in possession of the Village, and any decisions rendered by this office since 1993.

One issue in relation to the request involves the extent to which the request "reasonably describes" the records sought as required by §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law. I point out that it has been held by the Court of Appeals that to deny a request on the ground that it fails to reasonably describe the records, an agency must establish that "the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

The Court in Konigsberg found that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth and also stated that:

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency']" (id. at 250).

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping system. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

While I am unfamiliar with the recordkeeping systems of the Village, to extent that the records sought can be located with reasonable effort, a request, in my opinion would meet the requirement of reasonably describing the records. On the other hand, if the records are not maintained in a manner that permits their retrieval except by reviewing perhaps hundreds or even thousands of records individually in an effort to locate those falling within the scope of a request, to that extent, the request would not in my opinion meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

If, for example, minutes of meetings are not indexed by subject matter, locating minutes that include reference to a particular subject would likely require a review of all the minutes, line by line, covering the period that you described. In my view, a request of that nature would not "reasonably describe" the records.

Similarly, a request for laws, rules, regulations and the like is not, in my view, a request for records. In essence, it is a request for an interpretation of law requiring a judgment. Any number of provisions of law might be "applicable", and a disclosure of some of them, based on one's knowledge, may be incomplete due to an absence of expertise regarding the content and interpretation of each such law. Further, people, and perhaps attorneys in particular, might differ as to the applicability of a given provision of law. In contrast, if a request is made, for example, for "section 10 of the Village Code", no interpretation or judgment is necessary, for sections of law appear numerically and can readily be identified. That kind of request, in my opinion, would involve a portion of a record that must be disclosed. Again, a request for laws that might be "applicable" is not, in my view, a request for a record as envisioned by the Freedom of Information Law.

Other issues relate to the Open Meetings Law and minutes of meetings. Section 106 pertains to minutes and states that:

" 1. Minutes shall be taken at all open meetings of a public body which shall consist of a record or summary of all motions, proposals, resolutions and any other matter formally voted upon and the vote thereon.

2. Minutes shall be taken at executive sessions of any action that is taken by formal vote which shall consist of a record or summary of the final determination of such action, and the date and vote thereon; provided, however, that such summary need not include any matter which is not required to be made public by the freedom of information law as added by article six of this chapter.

3. Minutes of meetings of all public bodies shall be available to the public in accordance with the provisions of the freedom of information law within two weeks from the date of such meeting except that minutes taken pursuant to subdivision two hereof shall be available to the public within one week from the date of the executive session."

Subdivision (3) deals specifically with the time within which minutes must be prepared and made available, a period of two weeks with respect to minutes of open meetings, and one week when action is taken during executive sessions.

It is emphasized that there is nothing in the Open Meetings Law or any other statute of which I am aware that requires that minutes be approved. Nevertheless, as a matter of practice or policy, many public bodies approve minutes of their meetings. In the event that minutes have not been approved, to comply with the Open Meetings Law, it has consistently been advised that minutes be prepared and made available within two weeks, and that if the minutes have not been approved, they may be marked "unapproved", "draft" or "non-final", for example. By so doing within the requisite time limitations, the public can generally know what transpired at a meeting; concurrently, the public is effectively notified that the minutes are subject to change. If minutes have been prepared within less than two weeks, I believe that those unapproved minutes would be available as soon as they exist, and that they may be marked in the manner described above.

Further, in my opinion, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, and if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure.

Lastly, one of the issues relates to matters involving a real property transaction, and the pertinent provision concerning the ability to conduct an executive session to discuss such matters is §105(1)(h). That provision permits a public body to enter into executive session to discuss:

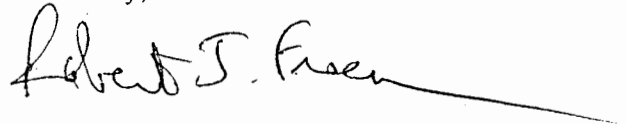

"the proposed acquisition, sale or lease of real property or the proposed acquisition of securities, or sale or exchange of securities held by such public body, but only when publicity would substantially affect the value thereof."

In my opinion, the language quoted above, like the other grounds for entry into executive session, is based on the principle that public business must be discussed in public unless public discussion would in some way be damaging, either to an individual, for example, or to a government in terms of its capacity to perform its functions appropriately and in the best interest of the public. It is clear that §105(1)(h) does not permit public bodies to conduct executive sessions to discuss all matters that may relate to the transaction of real property; only to the extent that publicity would "substantially affect the value of the property" can that provision validly be asserted.

If indeed publicity would substantially affect the value of real property, records, i.e., minutes of executive sessions, could likely be withheld in accordance with §106(2) of the Open Meetings Law to the extent authorized by §87(2)(c) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision permits an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure "would impair present or imminent contract awards..." As in the case of the rationale of §105(1)(h) of the Open Meetings Law, the cited provision of the Freedom of Information Law in my view authorizes an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure would place a government agency at a disadvantage in negotiations or would otherwise preclude the agency from engaging in an agreement optimal to taxpayers.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Attica, NY 14011-0149

Dear Mr. Bennett:

I have received your letter of August 3 in which you wrote that you have encountered difficulty in obtaining your arrest record from the City of Lockport Police Department. You indicated that you must send a "signed release statement notarized" and the reason for the request "along with a $10.00 fee." Although you met those conditions, you stated that you had received no further response as of the date of your letter to this office.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, the reason for making a request is irrelevant, and it has been held that records accessible under the Freedom of Information Law must be made equally available to any person, regardless of the status or interest of the person making the request [M. Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health and Hosps. Corp., 62 NY 2d 75 (1984), Burke v. Yudelson, 368 NYS 2d 779, aff'd 51 AD 2d 673, 378 NYS 2d 165 (1976)]. If the request involves materials that could be withheld from the public generally on the ground that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" but which would be available to you as the subject of the materials, the agency could require that you provide reasonable proof of your identity [see Freedom of Information Law, §89(2)(c)], such as a notarized statement proving your identity.

Second, assuming that your request involves a copy of an existing record, the Freedom of Information Law, §87(1)(b)(iii), limits the fee that can be charged to twenty-five cents per photocopy up to nine by fourteen inches.

Lastly, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. Dear Mr. Majette:

I have received two letters from you, and you requested records from this office in both.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not maintain custody or control of records generally. In short, I cannot provide the records in which you are interested because this office does not possess them.

For future reference, when seeking records, a request should be made to the agency that you believe maintains them. In view of the nature of your requests, it would appear that the records are kept at your facility. If that is so, I note that the regulations promulgated by the Department of Correctional Services indicate that a request for records kept at a correctional facility should be made to the facility superintendent or his designee.

In addition, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records and that §89(3) states in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. In the context of your request, if, for instance, the Department does not maintain "a list of employees designated by the Commissioner" to conduct certain hearings, it would not be required to create such a list on your behalf.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Bunker:

I have received your letter of August 30 in which you requested a subject matter list pertaining to you.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not maintain custody or control of records generally. In short, I cannot provide the record that you are seeking because this office does not possess it.

Further, while each agency is required to maintain a subject matter list, there is no requirement that such a list be prepared or maintained with respect to particular individuals.

By way of background, as you may be aware, §87(3)(c) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that each agency maintain:

"a reasonably detailed current list by subject matter, of all records in the possession of the agency, whether or not available under this article."

The subject matter list is not, in my opinion, required to identify each and every record of an agency; rather I believe that it must refer, by category and in reasonable detail, to the kinds of records maintained by an agency. Again, a subject matter list is not prepared with respect to records pertaining to a single individual.

Reference to the subject matter list is made in the regulations promulgated by the Department of Correctional Services, which in §5.13 state that:

September 3, 1999

"(a) Every custodian of records under these regulations shall maintain an up-to-date subject matter list, reasonably detailed, of all records in their possession. The records access officer shall maintain a master index, reasonably detailed, of all records maintained by the department. The master index shall include the lists kept by all custodians as well as a list of records maintained at the department's central office.

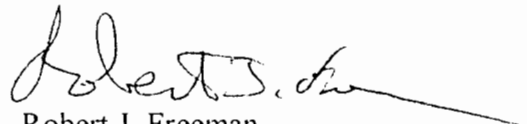

(b) Each subject matter list and the master index shall be sufficiently detailed to permit identification of the file category of the record sought.

(c) The master index shall be updated not less than twice per year. The most recent update shall appear on the first page of the subject matter list. Each custodian of records and the records access officer shall make available the index kept by him for inspection and copying. Any person desiring a copy of such list may request in writing a copy and upon payment of the appropriate fee, unless waived, a copy of such list shall be mailed or delivered."

Based on the foregoing, it is clear in my view that a master list must be maintained and made available at each facility. By reviewing a subject matter list, you can ascertain the kinds of records maintained by an agency and thereafter, request records based upon your review of the list.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Gowanda, NY 14070-0311

Dear Mr. Archer:

I have received your letter of August 25 in which you appealed a denial of access to records by the Commission of Correction to this office.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to determine appeals and cannot compel an agency to grant or deny access to records.

The provision dealing with the right to appeal a denial of access to records is found in §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Further, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), which govern the procedural aspects of the Law, state that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation or the head, chief executive or governing body of other agencies shall hear appeals or shall designate a person or body to hear appeals regarding denial of access to records under the Freedom of Information Law.

Mr. Paul Archer

(b) Denial of access shall be in writing stating the reason therefor and advising the person denied access of his or her right to appeal to the person or body established to hear appeals, and that person or body shall be identified by name, title, business address and business telephone number. The records access officer shall not be the appeals officer" (section 1401.7).

It is noted that the state's highest court has held that a failure to inform a person denied access to records of the right to appeal enables that person to seek judicial review of a denial. Citing the Committee's regulations and the Freedom of Information Law, the Court of Appeals in Barrett v. Morgenthau held that:

"[i]nasmuch as the District Attorney failed to advise petitioner of the availability of an administrative appeal in the office (see, 21 NYCRR 1401.7[b]) and failed to demonstrate in the proceeding that the procedures for such an appeal had, in fact, even been established (see, Public Officers Law [section] 87[1][b], he cannot be heard to complain that petitioner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies" [74 NY 2d 907, 909 (1989)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman
Executive Director

Dear Mr. Slagle:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of August 5. Please accept my apologies for the delay in response.

You have raised questions concerning the status of "work sessions" under the Open Meetings Law, the right of the public to speak at meetings, and the ability to gain access to records of a volunteer fire company. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, there is no legal distinction between a work session and a meeting. By way of background, it is noted that the definition of "meeting" has been broadly interpreted by the courts. In a landmark decision rendered in 1978, the Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, found that any gathering of a quorum of a public body for the purpose of conducting public business is a "meeting" that must be convened open to the public, whether or not there is an intent to take action and regardless of the manner in which a gathering may be characterized [see Orange County Publications v. Council of the City of Newburgh, 60 AD 2d 409, aff'd 45 NY 2d 947 (1978)].

I point out that the decision rendered by the Court of Appeals was precipitated by contentions made by public bodies that so-called "work sessions" and similar gatherings held for the purpose of discussion, but without an intent to take action, fell outside the scope of the Open Meetings Law. In discussing the issue, the Appellate Division, whose determination was unanimously affirmed by the Court of Appeals, stated that: document. Every step of the decision-making process, including the decision itself, is a necessary preliminary to formal action. Formal acts have always been matters of public record and the public has always been made aware of how its officials have voted on an issue. There would be no need for this law if this was all the Legislature intended. Obviously, every thought, as well as every affirmative act of a public official as it relates to and is within the scope of one's official duties is a matter of public concern. It is the entire decision-making process that the Legislature intended to affect by the enactment of this statute" (60 AD 2d 409, 415).

"We believe that the Legislature intended to include more than the mere formal act of voting or the formal execution of an official

The court also dealt with the characterization of meetings as "informal," stating that:

"The word 'formal' is defined merely as 'following or according with established form, custom, or rule' (Webster's Third New Int. Dictionary). We believe that it was inserted to safeguard the rights of members of a public body to engage in ordinary social transactions, but not to permit the use of this safeguard as a vehicle by which it precludes the application of the law to gatherings which have as their true purpose the discussion of the business of a public body" (id.).

Based upon the direction given by the courts, if a majority of a public body gathers to discuss public business, any such gathering, in my opinion, would ordinarily constitute a "meeting" subject to the Open Meetings Law that must be preceded by notice given in accordance with §104 of the Law.

Unless a public body has adopted a rule to the contrary, it may take action at a work session. With respect to minutes of work sessions and other meetings, the Open Meetings Law contains what might be viewed as minimum requirements concerning the contents of minutes. Specifically, §106 of the Open Meetings Law states that:

1. Minutes shall be taken at all open meetings of a public body which shall consist of a record or summary of all motions, proposals, resolutions and any other matter formally voted upon and the vote thereon.

2. Minutes shall be taken at executive sessions of any action that is taken by formal vote which shall consist of a record or summary of the final determination of such action, and the date and vote thereon; provided, however, that such summary need not include any matter which is not required to be made public by the freedom of information law as added by article six of this chapter.

3. Minutes of meetings of all public bodies shall be available to the public in accordance with the provisions of the freedom of information law within two weeks from the date of such meetings except that minutes taken pursuant to subdivision two hereof shall be available to the public within one week from the date of the executive session."

Based upon the foregoing, it is clear in my view that minutes need not consist of a verbatim account of what was said at a meeting; similarly, there is no requirement that minutes refer to every topic discussed or identify those who may have spoken. Although a public body may choose to prepare expansive minutes, at a minimum, minutes of open meetings must include reference to all motions, proposals, resolutions and any other matters upon which votes are taken. If those kinds of actions, such as motions or votes, do not occur during workshops, technically I do not believe that minutes must be prepared.

Second, the Open Meetings Law clearly provides the public with the right "to observe the performance of public officials and attend and listen to the deliberations and decisions that go into the making of public policy" (see Open Meetings Law, §100). However, the Law is silent with respect to the issue of public participation. Consequently, by means of example, if a public body does not want to answer questions or permit the public to speak or otherwise participate at its meetings, I do not believe that it would be obliged to do so. On the other hand, a public body may choose to answer questions and permit public participation, and many do so. When a public body does permit the public to speak, I believe that it should do so based upon reasonable rules that treat members of the public equally.

While public bodies have the right to adopt rules to govern their own proceedings (see e.g., Village Law, §4-412), the courts have found in a variety of contexts that such rules must be reasonable. For example, although a board of education may "adopt by laws and rules for its government and operations", in a case in which a board's rule prohibited the use of tape recorders at its meetings, the Appellate Division found that the rule was unreasonable, stating that the authority to adopt rules "is not unbridled" and that "unreasonable rules will not be sanctioned" [see Mitchell v. Garden City Union Free School District, 113 AD 2d 924, 925 (1985)]. Similarly, if by rule, a public body chose to permit certain citizens to address it for ten minutes while permitting others to address it for three, or not at all, such a rule, in my view, would be unreasonable.

And third, the status of volunteer fire companies had been unclear in the initial stages of the Freedom of Information Law. Those companies are generally not-for-profit corporations that perform their duties by means of contractual relationships with municipalities. As not-for-profit corporations, it was difficult to determine whether or not they conducted public business and performed a governmental function. Nevertheless, in Westchester-Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball [50 NYS 2d 575 (1980)], a case involving access to records relating to a lottery conducted by a volunteer fire company, the Court of Appeals, found that volunteer fire companies, despite their status as not-for-profit corporations, are "agencies" subject to the Freedom of Information Law. In so holding, the Court stated that:

"We begin by rejecting respondent's contention that, in applying the Freedom of Information Law, a distinction is to be made between a volunteer organization on which a local government relies for performance of an essential public service, as is true of the fire department here, and on the other hand, an organic arm of government, when that is the channel through which such services are delivered. Key is the Legislature's own unmistakably broad declaration that, '[a]s state and local government services increase and public problems become more sophisticated and complex and therefore harder to solve, and with the resultant increase in revenues and expenditures, it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' (emphasis added; Public Officers Law, §84).

"True, the Legislature, in separately delineating the powers and duties of volunteer fire departments, for example, has nowhere included an obligation comparable to that spelled out in the Freedom of Information statute (see Village Law, art 10; see, also, 39 NY Jur, Municipal Corporations, §§560-588). But, absent a provision exempting volunteer fire departments from the reach of article 6-and there is none-we attach no significance to the fact that these or other particular agencies, regular or volunteer, are not expressly included. For the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objections cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" (id. at 579).

Moreover, although it was contended that documents concerning the lottery were not subject to the Freedom of Information Law because they did not pertain to the performance of the company's fire fighting duties, the Court held that the documents constituted "records" subject to the Freedom of Information Law [see §86(4)].

More recently, another decision confirmed in an expansive manner that volunteer fire companies are required to be accountable. That decision, S.W. Pitts Hose Company et al. v. Capital Newspapers (Supreme Court, Albany County, January 25, 1988), dealt with the issue in terms of government control over volunteer fire companies. In its analysis, the Court stated that:

"Section 1402 of the Not-for-Profit Corporation Law is directly applicable to the plaintiffs and pertains to how volunteer fire companies are organized. Section 1402(e) provides:

'...a fire corporation, hereafter incorporated under this section shall be under the control of the city, village,

September 3, 1999

fire district or town authorities having by law, control over the prevention or extinguishment of fires therein. Such authorities may adopt rules and regulations for the government and control of such corporations.'

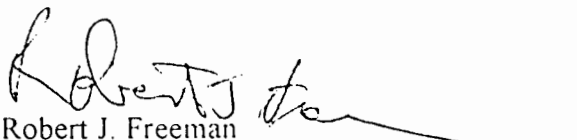

"These fire companies are formed by consent of the Colonie Town Board. The Town has control over the membership of the companies, as well as many other aspects of their structure, organization and operation (section 1402). The plaintiffs' contention that their relationship with the Town of Colonie is solely contractual is a mischaracterization. The municipality clearly has, by law, control over these volunteer organizations which reprovide a public function...

"This court recognizes the long, distinguished history of volunteer fire companies in New York State, and the vital services they provide to many municipalities. But not to be ignored is that their existence is inextricably linked to, dependent on, and under the control of the municipalities for which they provide an essential public service."

In sum, volunteer fire companies are required to disclose pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law in the same manner as municipal agencies.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Patrick A. Hildreth

Dear Mr. Hildreth:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of August 5. You have sought assistance in relation to delays that you have encountered in your attempt to gain access to records from the Mechanicville Community Development Agency.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

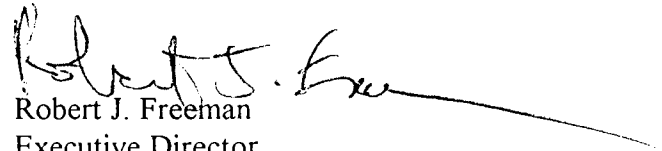

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

If a request is voluminous and a significant amount of time is needed to locate records and review them to determine rights of access, a delay beyond five business days, in view of those and perhaps the other kinds of factors mentioned earlier, might be reasonable. On the other hand, if a record or report is clearly public and can be found easily, there would appear to be no rational basis for delaying disclosure. In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

Gowanda Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 311

Dear Mr. Akaru:

I have received your letter of August 29 which you characterized as an appeal based on a failure on the part of officials at the Rikers Island Correctional Facility to respond to your request made under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide and guidance concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to determine appeals or to compel an agency to grant or deny access to records.

Pursuant to the regulations promulgated by the Committee (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests for records, and requests should ordinarily be sent to that person. While I believe that the recipient of your request should have responded directly in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law or forwarded the request to the appropriate person, it is suggested that you renew your request and send it to Mr. Thomas Antenen, Records Access Officer, Department of Corrections, 60 Hudson Street, 6th Floor, New York, NY 10013.

For future reference, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. The staff of the Committee on Open Government is authorized to issue advisory opinions. The ensuing staff advisory opinion is based solely upon the information presented in your correspondence.

Dear Mr. Nolen:

I have received your letter of August 2 in which you requested an opinion concerning your right under the Freedom of Information Law "to view standard public issue telephone books (white and yellow pages)...the standard local telephone company directories which are regularly distributed by telephone companies to businesses/residences and which contain telephone numbers and addresses of telephone subscribers who have voluntarily elected to have their telephone numbers, names and sometimes their address published..." (emphasis yours).

In my opinion, since telephone directories are, by their nature, public, the only issue is whether they constitute agency records. There are no judicial decisions of which I am aware that have focused on the matter. If a court were to determine that telephone directories are not the kind of materials envisioned by the Freedom of Information Law and, therefore, are not agency records, you would have no right of access. On the other hand, if a court found that telephone directories in possession of agencies constitute agency records, I believe that they would be available. In view of their public nature and wide distribution, none of the grounds for denial appearing in §87(2) of that statute would in my opinion be pertinent or applicable in that circumstance.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Isaac:

I have received your letters of August 3 and August 26 concerning the certification of records obtained from the New York City Police Department.

In my view, the Freedom of Information Law does not require that an agency provide a certification as envisioned by that statute unless asked to do so. As you are likely aware, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in relevant part that, in response to a request for a record, "the entity shall provide a copy of such record and certify to the correctness of such copy if so requested..." From my perspective, the certification required by the Freedom of Information Law does not involve an assertion that the contents of a record are accurate, but rather that a copy of a record made available in response to a request is a true copy. In essence, the certification is supposed to signify that the applicant received an actual copy of a record maintained by an agency, irrespective of the contents of the record.

In short, whether to seek a certification in accordance with §89(3) is your choice.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dannemora, NY 12929-2001

Dear Mr. Bernardo:

I have received your letter of August 5 in which you sought guidance in your efforts in obtaining your medical records from Harlem Hospital.

In this regard, since Harlem Hospital is part of the New York City Health and Hospitals Corporation, I believe that its records are subject to the Freedom of Information Law. In terms of rights granted by that statute, it is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

With regard to medical records, the Freedom of Information Law, in my view, likely permits that some of those records may be withheld in whole or in part, depending upon their contents. For instance, medical records prepared by hospital personnel could be characterized as "intra-agency materials" that fall within the scope of §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law. To the extent that such materials consist of advice, opinion, recommendation and the like, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law would permit a denial.

Nevertheless, a different statute, §18 of the Public Health Law, generally grants rights of access to medical records to the subjects of the records. As such, that statute may provide greater access to medical records than the Freedom of Information Law. It is suggested that you send your request to the hospital and make specific reference to §18 of the Public Health Law when seeking medical records.

To obtain additional information concerning access to medical records and the fees that may be charged for searching and copying those records, you may write to:

Dear Mr. Lindsay:

I have received your letter of August 5. You indicated that you sent requests to the New York City Department of Transportation on July 14 and July 27, but that as of the date of your letter to this office, you had neither been granted access to the records sought nor informed of the approximate date when the request would be granted. You wrote that "[t]his has been a long standing problem at NYCDOT" and asked that I inform that agency that is "not in compliance with law."

In this regard, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in relevant part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

It has been held that agency officials "did not conform to the mandates" of the provision quoted above "when they did not...furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of...requests along with a statement of the approximate date when action would be taken" [Newton v. Police Department, 585 NYS2d 5, 8, 183 AD2d 621 (1992), emphasis added].

In a case that described an experience that may be similar to yours, the court cited §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law and wrote that:

"The acknowledgement letters in this proceeding neither granted nor denied petitioner's request nor approximated a determination date. Rather, the letters were open ended as to time as they stated, 'that a period of time would be required to ascertain whether such documents do exist, and if they did, whether they qualify for inspection.

"This court finds that respondent's actions and/or inactions placed petitioner in a "Catch 22" position. The petitioner, relying on the respondent's representation, anticipated a determination to her request...this court finds that this petitioner should not be penalized for respondent's failure to comply with Public Officers Law §89 (3), especially when petitioner was advised by respondent that a decision concerning her application would be forthcoming.

It should also be noted that petitioner did not sit idle during this period but rather made numerous efforts to obtain a decision from respondent including the submission of a follow up letter to the Records Access Officer and submission of various requests for said records with the Department of Transportation" (Bernstein v. City of New York, Supreme Court, Supreme Court, New York County, November 7, 1990).

In Bernstein, the court determined that the agency "is stopped from asserting that this proceeding is improper due to petitioner's failure to appeal the denial of access to records within 30 days to the agency head, as provided in Public Officers Law, §89(4)(a)."

Based on the foregoing, I believe that your requests have been constructively denied and that you may appeal the denials pursuant to §89(4)(a). That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reason for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Alternatively, based on the holding in Bernstein, it appears that you could seek judicial review of the denials now. I suggest, however, that you appeal in an effort to avoid the time and cost of litigation.

Lastly, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of the Freedom of Information Law, a copy of this response will be forwarded to the Department's records access officer.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Southport Correctional Facility

Pine City, NY 14871

Dear Mr. Thompson:

I have received your letter of August 9 concerning an unanswered request under the Freedom of Information Law that you directed to the Attica Correctional Facility.

In this regard, first, having reviewed your request, some elements of the request are, in my view, inconsistent with the Freedom of Information Law. For instance, you wrote that you "would like to know what are the state laws and rules governing videotaping inmates being escorted to the S.H.U." In my view, that kind of inquiry involves a judgment or interpretation concerning the applicability of law; I do not believe that it constitutes a request for records as envisioned by the Freedom of Information Law. Any number of laws or rules might be pertinent, and individuals may disagree as to their application. In contrast, a request for a particular section of law or policy would, in my opinion, constitute a valid request.

Second, when a proper request is made, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which an agency must respond. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

Mr. Hasheen Thompson

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

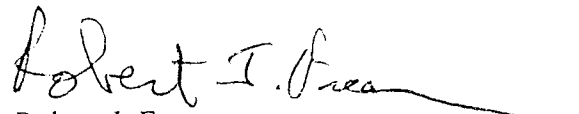

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

For your information, the person designated by the Department of Correctional Services to determine appeals is Anthony J. Annucci, Counsel to the Department.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Woodbourne Correctional Facility
Pouch No. 1
Woodbourne, NY 12788

Dear Mr. King:

I have received your letter of August 8 in which you sought my views concerning two issues relating to the Freedom of Information Law.

With respect to the first, having received your parole summary, you read that it stated that you need drug counseling, even though you contend that you do not have a drug problem. When you asked the parole officer at your facility how he determined that drug treatment was warranted, you wrote that "after he reviewed [your] guidance folder, which is maintained by the Department of Corrections (DOCS), he found a document in which [you] stated [you] had 'panic attacks related to cocaine abuse'." You then "asked him under FOIL to identify the document and/or to send [you] a copy." He indicated that you should "take it up with the DOCS."

In my view, if the parole officer has possession of the record in question, even though it might have been prepared by a different agency, he would be obliged to respond to a request made under the Freedom of Information Law. That statute pertains to all agency records, and §86(4) defines the term "record" to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Mr. Philip King
September 9, 1999

Based on the foregoing, if two or more agencies possess the same record, each would be responsible for answering a request made under the Freedom of Information Law. On the other hand, if the parole officer merely read a record maintained by the Department of Correctional Services and does not possess a copy, he would have no obligation, in my opinion, to answer your question or obtain a copy for you.

The second area of inquiry relates to testimony by internal affairs officers at your trial regarding "the possible involvement of a police officer in your case." It appears that you are referring to the unit in the New York City Police Department.

I believe that requests for records concerning the activities of the Internal Affairs unit should be made to the New York City Police Department's records access officer, Sgt. Richard Evangelista at One Police Plaza.

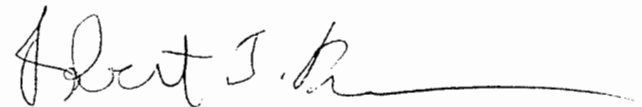

Assuming that the reports of your interest concern possible misconduct on the part of a police officer, it is likely in my view that they may be withheld.

As you may be aware, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §50-a of the Civil Rights Law. In brief, that statute provides that personnel records of police and correction officers that are used to evaluate performance toward continued employment or promotion are confidential. If my understanding of the matter is accurate, §50-a of the Civil Rights Law would serve to remove the records from the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dorothy M. Watson

Dear Ms. Watson:

I have received your undated letter, which reached this office on August 13. You have sought an advisory opinion concerning a request made to the City of Tonawanda School District.

In an appeal submitted on July 14, you wrote that the records that "were not provided" are as follows:

"...I want the grades of students grouped by teacher who have passed the regents, failed the course, the course that was failed, the specific teacher, and the marks given the student each quarter for the past three years. In addition I want every individual regent grade, the corresponding quarterly marks, the final average corresponding to each regent grade by teacher for the high school."

You specified that you did not want students' names, and you provided a table to be filled out that would include the information sought. The original request was apparently denied based on a contention that the records sought do not exist, which you find "impossible to believe."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and that §89(3) of that statute states in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, District officials would not be obliged to prepare a new record by completing the table that you provided. Further, I would conjecture that the information in which you are interested exists, but not in the format or with the combination of items in which you requested it. It is suggested that you confer with District officials to ascertain the manner in which

Second, as you inferred in your appeal, insofar as District records are identifiable to students, they must be withheld. Relevant to the matter is the initial ground for denial, §87(2)(a), which pertains to records that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." In this instance, insofar as disclosure of the records in question would or could identify a student or students, I believe that they must be withheld. A statute that exempts records from disclosure is the Family Education Rights and Privacy Act (20 U.S.C. section 1232g), which is commonly known as "FERPA." In brief, FERPA applies to all educational agencies or institutions that participate in grant programs administered by the United States Department of Education. As such, FERPA includes within its scope virtually all public educational institutions and many private educational institutions. The focal point of the Act is the protection of privacy of students. It provides, in general, that any "education record," a term that is broadly defined, that is personally identifiable to a particular student or students is confidential, unless the parents of students under the age of eighteen waive their right to confidentiality, or unless a student eighteen years or over similarly waives his or her right to confidentiality. Further, the federal regulations promulgated under FERPA define the phrase "personally identifiable information" to include:

- "(a) The student's name;
- (b) The name of the student's parents or other family member;
- (c) The address of the student or student's family;
- (d) A personal identifier, such as the student's social security number or student number;
- (e) A list of personal characteristics that would make the student's identity easily traceable; or
- (f) Other information that would make the student's identity easily traceable" (34 CFR Section 99.3).

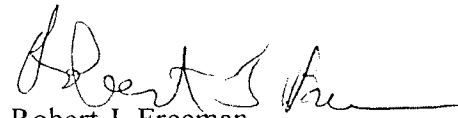

Based upon the foregoing, references to students' names or other aspects of records that would make a student's identity easily traceable must in my view be withheld in order to comply with federal law.

In a case dealing with a request that may be analogous to yours, an applicant sought records of test scores that were prepared by class in alphabetical order. The school district contended that, even if names of students were deleted, because the lists were maintained alphabetically, the identities of some students might be made known. In determining the issue, the Court ordered that names be deleted from the records and that the records be "scrambled" in order to protect against the possible identification of students [Kryston v. East Ramapo School District, 77 AD 2d 896 (1980)]. In that decision, the district was required to disclose the grades in a manner in which students' identities were protected. Stated differently, the grades were required to be disclosed, but any identifying details pertaining to students were required to have been withheld.

Alden, NY 14004-1187

Dear Mr. McKissick:

I have received your letter of August 5. As I understand your remarks, you are interested in obtaining records relating to certain judicial proceedings.

It appears that the primary source of the records of your interest would be the court in which the proceedings were conducted. In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law, the statute within the advisory jurisdiction of the Committee on Open Government, is applicable to agency records. Section 86(3) of that statute defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. It is recommended that a request for court records be directed to the clerk of the court in which the proceeding was conducted, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

Ms. Josephine P. Dority
Clerk-Treasurer
Village of Ravena
15 Mountain Road
Ravena, NY 12143

Dear Ms. Dority:

I have received your letter of August 9 and a copy of correspondence sent to you by Mr. Laszlo Polyak on August 6 concerning his requests under the Freedom of Information Law. You wrote that you "do not know what to do and do not know exactly what he is asking for." You asked that I provide guidance "[i]f [I] can figure out what he is trying to say."

Having reviewed Mr. Polyak's letter, I offer the following comments.

In his first paragraph, Mr. Polyak indicated that he has not yet received all of the zoning and Planning Board minutes that he requested and suggested that in one request, he sought minutes of the Zoning Board rather than the Planning Board. In this regard, as you are aware, minutes of meetings of public bodies are clearly available under the Freedom of Information Law. If the minutes of the two boards are maintained in a manner in which they can be reviewed or easily copied, i.e. if they are kept in chronological order in a looseleaf binder, a file drawer, a minute book, etc., it is suggested that you enable Mr. Polyak to inspect them. Based on such a review, he could identify those for which he might want copies, and you could then make copies following his payment of the proper fee.

The second paragraph appears to refer to an opinion that I prepared in which it was advised, based on a judicial decision, that records must be made available for inspection during regular business hours. This is not to suggest that you or others are required to suspend your other work to instantly accommodate a person seeking records under the Freedom of Information Law. If records are in use by staff or if you are unable to make records available on a certain day or during a certain period of time, access may in my view be delayed to a date that is mutually convenient to you and the applicant. On that date, however, I do not believe that there could be a limitation on the time to review records to less than regular business hours.

In the third paragraph, reference is made to questions relating to variances. While I am unfamiliar with the questions, it is noted that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and that §89 (3) of the Law provides in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. As such, the obligation of an agency under the Freedom of Information Law involves providing access to existing records; it does not require that agency officials answer questions or prepare new records in an effort to respond to questions.

As I understand his comments, Mr. Polyak is seeking "hard copies of the public notices as published" relative to hearings and variances, as well as "cover letter" indicating when legal notices were placed and when variances were filed after being granted. In my view, you would not be required by the Freedom of Information Law to prepare a "cover letter" containing the information sought. Again, your obligation under the Freedom of Information Law involves providing existing records. If existing records include the information sought, I believe that they should be disclosed. If the Village does not maintain the information in its records, Mr. Polyak should be so informed.

The fourth paragraph in my view consists of a commentary rather than a request for records, and in the fifth, the only clear reference to a request for records pertains to "ZBA maps." Again, if the maps in question exist and can be found, I believe that they should be made available.

Mr. Polyak has suggested that responses to his requests have been delayed. In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

While an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Another issue appears to involve the clarity or perhaps absence of clarity of his requests. Here I point out that §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. I point out that it has been held by the Court of Appeals that to deny a request on the ground that it fails to reasonably describe the records, an agency must establish that "the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

September 9, 1999

The Court in Konigsberg found that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth and also stated that:

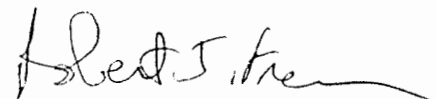

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency'])" (id. at 250).

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping system. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

While I am unfamiliar with the Village's recordkeeping systems, to the extent that the records sought can be located with reasonable effort, I believe that the requests would meet the requirement of reasonably describing the records. On the other hand, if the records are not maintained in a manner that permits their retrieval except by reviewing perhaps hundreds or thousands of records individually in an effort to locate those falling within the scope of a request, to that extent, a request would not in my opinion meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Ms. Lorraine O. Taylor

Dear Ms. Taylor:

I have received your letter of August 20 and the materials attached to it. As a member of the Institutional Review Board (IRB) for Hutchings Psychiatric Center, you have questioned the legality and scope of a confidentiality agreement that IRB members are apparently required to sign. The agreement includes examples of information characterized as or "reasonably understood" to be confidential and provides that members "agree not to discuss, disclose, or reproduce any confidential information except to carry out [their] functions as an IRB member, or as otherwise required by law." In addition, a memorandum from the Research Foundation for Mental Hygiene, Inc. concerning confidentiality states that "IRB members have a legal and ethical duty to maintain the confidentiality of all information they receive in their capacity as members of the IRB."

You raised questions concerning the need to sign the agreement.

In this regard, the general functions of the Committee on Open Government involve offering advice and opinions concerning public access to and the disclosure of government information, primarily under the Freedom of Information and Personal Privacy Protection Laws. Consequently, the question of whether you "need to sign this confidentiality agreement" is beyond the jurisdiction of this office. However, I offer the following comments relating to the agreement and the notion of "confidentiality."

First, in general, I believe that the records and other information that come into the possession of IRB members are acquired in the performance of their official duties that are carried out directly or otherwise for the Office of Mental Health. By means of example, the letter that you sent to me may be in my physical possession, but it is in the legal custody of the Department of State. In the same vein, the information acquired by IRB members in the performance of their duties is, in my view, the property of the state, and outside the authority of the members to disclose in their discretion.

The Freedom of Information Law, in terms of its coverage, is consistent with the foregoing, for it pertains to "agency records." Section 86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" expansively to mean:

"...any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

In a decision rendered by the state's highest court, the Court of Appeals, the matter involved records in possession of a not-for-profit corporation that carried out certain functions for the State University pursuant to contract and it was held that the records were held for the University and, therefore, were agency records that fell within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law, even though they were not in the physical custody of the University [see Encore College Bookstores, Inc. v. Auxiliary Services Corporation of the State University, 87 NY2d 410 (1995)]. In like manner, materials acquired or prepared by IRB members would be maintained for the Office of Mental Health and would constitute agency records.

While I believe that the Research Foundation of Mental Hygiene, Inc. is an agency that falls within the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law [see e.g., Buffalo News v. Buffalo Enterprise Development Corp., 84 NY2d 488 (1994)], irrespective of that issue, my understanding is that its functions are performed for one or more agencies, such as the Office of Mental Health, and that, therefore, its records are maintained for an agency and are subject to rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law.

In short, I believe that the records that come into the possession of IRB members are in the legal custody and control of an agency.

Second, although the use of the term "confidentiality" in the agreement is not entirely clear, the agreement, in general, does not appear to be inconsistent with law. Insofar as there may be inconsistency, I do not believe that it would be valid or enforceable. I note, too, that a statement cited earlier in the memorandum is broader, in my opinion, than the agreement itself. As indicated previously, the memorandum states in part that "IRB members have legal and ethical duty to maintain the confidentiality of all information they receive in their capacity as members..." The agreement itself, however, involves the discussion, disclosure, or reproduction of "confidential information". The term "confidential" is not defined, but examples of information "reasonably understood" to be confidential are described, such as human subject identifying data, proprietary information, medical information and the like.

From my perspective, based on judicial decisions, an assertion or promise of confidentiality, unless it is based upon a statute, is generally meaningless. When confidentiality is conferred by a statute, an act of the State Legislature or Congress, records fall outside the scope of rights of access pursuant to §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states that an agency may withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". If there is no statute upon which an agency can rely to characterize records as "confidential" or "exempted from disclosure", the records are subject to whatever rights of access exist under the Freedom of Information Law [see Doolan v. BOCES, 48 NY 2d 341 (1979); Washington Post v. Insurance Department, 61 NY 2d 557 (1984); Gannett News Service, Inc. v. State Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse, 415 NYS 2d 780 (1979)]. As such, an assertion or promise of confidentiality, without more, would not in my view serve to enable an agency to withhold a record.

In the context of the kinds of records that may be pertinent to the duties of the Foundation, the IRB's and the Office of Mental Health, a statute that requires confidentiality is §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law. That statute essentially prohibits the disclosure of clinical records identifiable to a person receiving treatment except in circumstances that it prescribes. When records fall within the confidentiality requirements imposed by §33.13, they would be "specifically exempted from disclosure by...statute" in accordance with §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law.

Also pertinent to the duties of those concerned may be the Personal Privacy Protection Law, which deals in part with the disclosure of records or personal information by state agencies concerning data subjects. A "data subject" is "any natural person about whom personal information has been collected by an agency" [Personal Privacy Protection Law, §92(3)]. "Personal information" is defined to mean "any information concerning a data subject which, because of name, number, symbol, mark or other identifier, can be used to identify that data subject" [§92(7)]. For purposes of that statute, the term "record" is defined to mean "any item, collection or grouping of personal information about a data subject which is maintained and is retrievable by use of the name or other identifier of the data subject" [§92(9)].

With respect to disclosure, §96(1) of the Personal Privacy Protection Law states that "No agency may disclose any record or personal information", except in conjunction with a series of exceptions that follow. One of those exceptions involves a situation in which a record is "subject to article six of this chapter [the Freedom of Information Law], unless disclosure of such information would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as defined in paragraph (a) of subdivision two of section eighty-nine of this chapter." Section 89(2-a) of the Freedom of Information Law states that "Nothing in this article shall permit disclosure which constitutes an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as defined in subdivision two of this section if such disclosure is prohibited under section ninety-six of this chapter." Therefore, when a state agency cannot disclose records pursuant to §96 of the Personal Protection Law, it is precluded from disclosing under the Freedom of Information Law.

When either §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law or the Personal Privacy Protection Law applies, there is essentially no discretion to disclose to the public. In other circumstances, however, although records may be withheld, there is no obligation to do so.

Reference is made in the materials to "proprietary rights." Depending on the effects of disclosure, so-called "proprietary" information might properly be withheld under §87(2)(d) of the Freedom of Information Law. Nevertheless, unlike the provisions cited above, under §87(2)(d) and the remaining grounds for denial in the Freedom of Information Law, there is nothing in law that would prohibit disclosure. Section 87(2)(d) permits (but does not require) an agency to withhold records or portions that:

“are trade secrets or are submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise or derived from information obtained from a commercial enterprise and which if disclosed would cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the subject enterprise...”

The mere characterization of a record as “proprietary” or as a trade secret, like a claim of confidentiality, may be without substance unless there is a provision of law upon which it can be based; the capacity to deny access involves the extent to which disclosure “would cause substantial injury to the competitive position” of a commercial enterprise.

As I interpret the memorandum, a key element involves the “standards and procedures” that have been implemented to deal with requests for and the disclosure of records. Section 89(1) of the Freedom of Information Law requires the Committee on Open Government to promulgate regulations concerning the procedural implementation of that statute (21 NYCRR Part 1401). In turn, §87(1) requires the head or governing body of an agency to adopt rules and regulations consistent those promulgated by the Committee and with the Freedom of Information Law. Section 1401.2 of the regulations provides in relevant part that:

“(a) The governing body of a public corporation and the head of an executive agency or governing body of other agencies shall be responsible for insuring compliance with the regulations herein, and shall designate one or more persons as records access officer by name or by specific job title and business address, who shall have the duty of coordinating agency response to public requests for access to records. The designation of one or more records access officers shall not be construed to prohibit officials who have in the past been authorized to make records or information available to the public from continuing to do so.”

Based on the foregoing, I believe that the records access officer has the duty of coordinating responses to requests.

From my perspective, it is routine to limit the authority of agency personnel and others to make disclosures on their own initiative or in response to requests. In many agencies, requests for records are forwarded as a matter of policy to the designated records access officer in order that he or she can make an initial determination to grant or deny access in accordance with applicable law. The direction given in the memorandum appears to be consistent with that kind of procedure.

In sum, it is likely that many of the records used or maintained by IRB members may be confidential”, but that would be so only when a statute prohibits disclosure. In other instances, there may be discretion to withhold under the Freedom of Information Law, but no legal obligation to do so. Perhaps most importantly, the Freedom of Information Law requires agencies to adopt regulations regarding the procedural implementation of the law. In accordance with such a procedure, one or more "records access officers" may be given the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests and disclosure practices. Unless authority to disclose is otherwise granted to persons other than the records access officer, limiting the ability of those other persons to disclose is, in my opinion, within the discretion of an agency. I note, too, that there is nothing in the agreement which, in my view, limits access by IRB members or which in any way limits public rights of access in a manner inconsistent with law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Ms. Collier:

I have received your letter of August 20 and the materials attached to it. As a member of the Institutional Review Board (IRB) for Hutchings Psychiatric Center, you have questioned the legality and scope of a confidentiality agreement that IRB members are apparently required to sign. The agreement includes examples of information characterized as or "reasonably understood" to be confidential and provides that members "agree not to discuss, disclose, or reproduce any confidential information except to carry out [their] functions as an IRB member, or as otherwise required by law." In addition, a memorandum from the Research Foundation for Mental Hygiene, Inc. concerning confidentiality states that "IRB members have a legal and ethical duty to maintain the confidentiality of all information they receive in their capacity as members of the IRB."

You asked that I advise "as to whether [you] need to sign this confidentiality statement or challenge it as being too restrictive."

In this regard, the general functions of the Committee on Open Government involve offering advice and opinions concerning public access to and the disclosure of government information, primarily under the Freedom of Information and Personal Privacy Protection Laws. Consequently, the question of whether you "need to sign this confidentiality agreement" is beyond the jurisdiction of this office. However, I offer the following comments relating to the agreement and the notion of "confidentiality."

First, in general, I believe that the records and other information that come into the possession of IRB members are acquired in the performance of their official duties that are carried out directly or otherwise for the Office of Mental Health. By means of example, the letter that you sent to me may be in my physical possession, but it is in the legal custody of the Department of State. In the same vein, the information acquired by IRB members in the performance of their duties is, in my view, the property of the state, and outside the authority of the members to disclose in their discretion.

The Freedom of Information Law, in terms of its coverage, is consistent with the foregoing, for it pertains to "agency records." Section 86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" expansively to mean:

"...any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

In a decision rendered by the state's highest court, the Court of Appeals, the matter involved records in possession of a not-for-profit corporation that carried out certain functions for the State University pursuant to contract and it was held that the records were held for the University and, therefore, were agency records that fell within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law, even though they were not in the physical custody of the University [see Encore College Bookstores, Inc. v. Auxiliary Services Corporation of the State University, 87 NY2d 410 (1995)]. In like manner, materials acquired or prepared by IRB members would be maintained for the Office of Mental Health and would constitute agency records.

While I believe that the Research Foundation of Mental Hygiene, Inc. is an agency that falls within the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law [see e.g., Buffalo News v. Buffalo Enterprise Development Corp., 84 NY2d 488 (1994)], irrespective of that issue, my understanding is that its functions are performed for one or more agencies, such as the Office of Mental Health, and that, therefore, its records are maintained for an agency and are subject to rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law.

In short, I believe that the records that come into the possession of IRB members are in the legal custody and control of an agency.

Second, although the use of the term "confidentiality" in the agreement is not entirely clear, the agreement, in general, does not appear to be inconsistent with law. Insofar as there may be inconsistency, I do not believe that it would be valid or enforceable. I note, too, that a statement cited earlier in the memorandum is broader, in my opinion, than the agreement itself. As indicated previously, the memorandum states in part that "IRB members have legal and ethical duty to maintain the confidentiality of all information they receive in their capacity as members..." The agreement itself, however, involves the discussion, disclosure, or reproduction of "confidential information". The term "confidential" is not defined, but examples of information "reasonably understood" to be confidential are described, such as human subject identifying data, proprietary information, medical information and the like.

From my perspective, based on judicial decisions, an assertion or promise of confidentiality, unless it is based upon a statute, is generally meaningless. When confidentiality is conferred by a statute, an act of the State Legislature or Congress, records fall outside the scope of rights of access pursuant to §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states that an agency may withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". If there is no statute upon which an agency can rely to characterize records as "confidential" or "exempted from disclosure", the records are subject to whatever rights of access exist under the Freedom of Information Law [see Doolan v. BOCES, 48 NY 2d 341 (1979); Washington Post v. Insurance Department, 61 NY 2d 557 (1984); Gannett News Service, Inc. v. State Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse, 415 NYS 2d 780 (1979)]. As such, an assertion or promise of confidentiality, without more, would not in my view serve to enable an agency to withhold a record.

In the context of the kinds of records that may be pertinent to the duties of the Foundation, the IRB's and the Office of Mental Health, a statute that requires confidentiality is §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law. That statute essentially prohibits the disclosure of clinical records identifiable to a person receiving treatment except in circumstances that it prescribes. When records fall within the confidentiality requirements imposed by §33.13, they would be "specifically exempted from disclosure by...statute" in accordance with §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law.

Also pertinent to the duties of those concerned may be the Personal Privacy Protection Law, which deals in part with the disclosure of records or personal information by state agencies concerning data subjects. A "data subject" is "any natural person about whom personal information has been collected by an agency" [Personal Privacy Protection Law, §92(3)]. "Personal information" is defined to mean "any information concerning a data subject which, because of name, number, symbol, mark or other identifier, can be used to identify that data subject" [§92(7)]. For purposes of that statute, the term "record" is defined to mean "any item, collection or grouping of personal information about a data subject which is maintained and is retrievable by use of the name or other identifier of the data subject" [§92(9)].

With respect to disclosure, §96(1) of the Personal Privacy Protection Law states that "No agency may disclose any record or personal information", except in conjunction with a series of exceptions that follow. One of those exceptions involves a situation in which a record is "subject to article six of this chapter [the Freedom of Information Law], unless disclosure of such information would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as defined in paragraph (a) of subdivision two of section eighty-nine of this chapter." Section 89(2-a) of the Freedom of Information Law states that "Nothing in this article shall permit disclosure which constitutes an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as defined in subdivision two of this section if such disclosure is prohibited under section ninety-six of this chapter." Therefore, when a state agency cannot disclose records pursuant to §96 of the Personal Protection Law, it is precluded from disclosing under the Freedom of Information Law.

When either §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law or the Personal Privacy Protection Law applies, there is essentially no discretion to disclose to the public. In other circumstances, however, although records may be withheld, there is no obligation to do so.

Reference is made in the materials to "proprietary rights." Depending on the effects of disclosure, so-called "proprietary" information might properly be withheld under §87(2)(d) of the Freedom of Information Law. Nevertheless, unlike the provisions cited above, under §87(2)(d) and the remaining grounds for denial in the Freedom of Information Law, there is nothing in law that would prohibit disclosure. Section 87(2)(d) permits (but does not require) an agency to withhold records or portions that:

“are trade secrets or are submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise or derived from information obtained from a commercial enterprise and which if disclosed would cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the subject enterprise...”

The mere characterization of a record as “proprietary” or as a trade secret, like a claim of confidentiality, may be without substance unless there is a provision of law upon which it can be based; the capacity to deny access involves the extent to which disclosure “would cause substantial injury to the competitive position” of a commercial enterprise.

Ms. Shawn Schultz
Citizen's Against the Dump
P.O. Box 93
Pattersonville, NY 12137

Dear Ms. Schultz:

I have received your undated letter, which reached this office on August 10.

You have sought an advisory opinion concerning a request made to the Town of Rotterdam on July 12 for the "Draft of the Sterling/Spectra Leachate investigation and remediation study of the Rotterdam MSW Landfill." You wrote that the request was denied on July 30 and that you appealed "on that same day." On August 2, you were informed that the Town Engineer, in your words, "had destroyed the draft since it was a draft and not a finalized report." You added that "[s]he was well aware this draft was under foil as [you] and the records access officer had been in touch with her on repeated occasions."

You have raised the following questions in relation to the foregoing:

- a) Did the town have the obligation to provide all or certain parts of the draft?
- b) Is this draft covered by attorney client privilege since a lawyer hired by the town reviewed it?
- c) What document is needed to prove the record no longer exists?
- d) If the record was destroyed what remedies are available to us?"

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, questions (a) and (b) will be considered together, for they both deal essentially with whether or the extent to which the draft should have been made available.

It is emphasized at the outset that the Freedom of Information Law, as a general matter, is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Further, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to all agency records, and that §86(4) defines the term "record" expansively to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, I believe that the draft clearly constituted a town record that fell within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law.

With respect to the attorney-client privilege, the fact that an attorney may have been retained to review a record would not alter the character of the record or transform it into privileged material. By means of example, if an attorney is hired to review public records, such as minutes of meetings, a developer's plans to construct a new building, or assessment records, his or her review of those records would in no way affect the public's right to obtain them under the Freedom of Information Law; again, the content, the character and the purpose for which the records were prepared would not change.

As I understand the matter, the draft was not prepared by or at the direction of an attorney retained by the Town. If that is so, the attorney client privilege would not be pertinent.

If records are prepared by or for an attorney, as in the case of a report prepared for litigation by an expert, they may be beyond the scope of rights of access. The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." When records are subject to the attorney-client privilege, they would be exempted from disclosure under §4503 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules (CPLR). Another statute that exempts records from disclosure is §3101(d) of the Civil Practice Law and Rules, which exempts material prepared for litigation from disclosure. It is emphasized, however, that it has been determined judicially that if records are prepared for multiple purposes, one of which includes eventual use in litigation, §3101(d) does not serve as a basis for withholding records; only when records are prepared solely for litigation can §3101(d) be properly asserted to deny access to records [see e.g., Westchester-Rockland Newspapers v. Mosczydlowski, 58 AD 2d 234 (1977)].

Again, as I interpret your comments, the draft was not prepared by or at the direction of an attorney, nor was it prepared solely for litigation. If that is so, neither §87(2)(a) nor the attorney-client privilege would in my view have authorized the Town to withhold the draft.

If Sterling/Spectra served as a consultant for the Town, another ground for denial would be relevant to an analysis of rights of access. Due to its structure, however, that provision would likely have required substantial disclosure.

Specifically, §87(2)(g) permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In a discussion of the issue of records prepared by consultants for agencies, the Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, stated that:

"Opinions and recommendations prepared by agency personnel may be exempt from disclosure under FOIL as 'predecisional materials, prepared to assist an agency decision makerin arriving at his decision' (McAulay v. Board of Educ., 61 AD 2d 1048, aff'd 48 NY 2d 659). Such material is exempt 'to protect the deliberative process of government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role would be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers (Matter of Sea Crest Const. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD 2d 546, 549).

"In connection with their deliberative process, agencies may at times require opinions and recommendations from outside consultants. It would make little sense to protect the deliberative process when such reports are prepared by agency employees yet deny this protection when reports are prepared for the same purpose by outside consultants retained by agencies. Accordingly, we hold that records may be considered 'intra-agency material' even though prepared by an outside consultant at the behest of an agency as part of the agency's deliberative process (see, Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD 2d 546, 549, supra; Matter of 124 Ferry St. Realty Corp. v. Hennessy, 82 AD 2d 981, 983)" [Xerox Corporation v. Town of Webster, 65 NY 2d 131, 132-133 (1985)].

Based upon the foregoing, records prepared by a consultant for an agency may be withheld or must be disclosed based upon the same standards as in cases in which records are prepared by the staff of an agency. It is emphasized that the Court in Xerox specified that the contents of intra-agency materials determine the extent to which they may be available or withheld, for it was held that:

"While the reports in principle may be exempt from disclosure, on this record - which contains only the barest description of them - we cannot determine whether the documents in fact fall wholly within the scope of FOIL's exemption for 'intra-agency materials,' as claimed by respondents. To the extent the reports contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law section 87[2][g][i], or other material subject to production, they should be redacted and made available to the appellant" (id. at 133).

Therefore, a record prepared by a consultant for an agency would be accessible or deniable, in whole or in part, depending on its contents.

In sum, assuming that the draft was prepared by a consultant retained by the Town, those portions of the draft consisting of statistical or factual information would, in my opinion, have been available.

If Sterling/Spectra did not serve as a consultant, it does not appear that any ground for denial would have applied. In that event, I believe that the report would have been available in its entirety.

Next, when an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

I point out that in Key v. Hynes [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search". However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when "the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made" [Thomas v. Records Access Officer, 613 NYS 2d 929, 205 AD 2d 786 (1994)].

It is also suggested that you inquire as to whether Sterling/Spectra maintains a copy of the draft. As indicated earlier, the definition of "record" includes information produced for an agency. Therefore, if that firm maintains a copy of the draft or has stored the draft electronically, I believe that the Town would be required to acquire a copy for the purpose of reviewing it and disclosing its contents to the extent required by the Freedom of Information Law.

With respect to the destruction of the draft, pertinent in my view is the "Local Government Records Law", Article 57-A of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law, which deals with the management, custody, retention and disposal of records by local governments. For purposes of those provisions, §57.17(4) of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law defines "record" to mean:

"...any book, paper, map, photograph, or other information-recording device, regardless of physical form or characteristic, that is made, produced, executed, or received by any local government or officer thereof pursuant to law or in connection with the transaction of public business. Record as used herein shall not be deemed to include library materials, extra copies of documents created only for convenience of reference, and stocks of publications."

With respect to the retention and disposal of records, §57.25 of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law states in relevant part that:

"1. It shall be the responsibility of every local officer to maintain records to adequately document the transaction of public business and the services and programs for which such officer is responsible; to retain and have custody of such records for so long as the records are needed for the conduct of the business of the office; to adequately protect such records; to cooperate with the local government's records management officer on programs for the orderly and efficient management of records including identification and management of inactive records and identification and preservation of records of enduring value; to dispose of records in accordance with legal requirements; and to pass on to his successor records needed for the continuing conduct of business of the office..."

2. No local officer shall destroy, sell or otherwise dispose of any public record without the consent of the commissioner of education. The commissioner of education shall, after consultation with other state agencies and with local government officers, determine the minimum length of time that records need to be retained. Such commissioner is authorized to develop, adopt by regulation, issue and distribute to local governments retention and disposal schedules establishing minimum retention periods..."

In view of the foregoing, records cannot be destroyed without the consent of the Commissioner of Education, and local officials cannot destroy or dispose of records until the minimum period for the retention of the records has been reached. I note that the provisions relating to the retention and disposal of records are carried out by a unit of the State Education Department, the State Archives and Records Administration. It is suggested that you contact that agency to ascertain the applicable retention period concerning the draft.

Finally, §240.65 entitled "Unlawful prevention of public access to records" and §89(8) of the Freedom of Information Law deal with the destruction of records requested pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law. The former states that:

"A person is guilty of unlawful prevention of public access to records when, with intent to prevent the public inspection of a record pursuant to article six of the public officers law, he willfully conceals or destroys any such record."

From my perspective, the preceding may be applicable in two circumstances: first, when an agency employee receives a request for a record and indicates that the agency does not maintain the record even though he or she knows that the agency does maintain the record; or second, when an agency employee destroys a record following a request for that record in order to prevent public disclosure of the record. As in the case of any violation of the Penal Law, such violation may be prosecuted by a district attorney.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Douglas Hewitt

Dear Mr. Hewitt:

I have received your letter of August 9, as well as the materials attached to it.

On June 21, you sent a request to the Office of the Oneida County District Attorney for "[a]ll information regarding...the investigation into the Village of Yorkville, Its Employees and the Yorkville Police Department including Past and Present employees' regarding [your] complaint to the Oneida County District Attorneys Office." Although you indicated that you had seen some of the records in the presence of the District Attorney, the request was denied "pursuant to Public Officers Law §87(2)(a), (b), (e) i, (e) ii, (e) iii, (e) iv, (g) i, (g) ii and (g) iii." In addition, you were informed that the request was "overly broad, vague and not readily identifiable..." Although you appealed the denial in a letter received by the Office of the District Attorney on July 7, as of the date of your letter to this office, you had received no further response.

You asked that this office investigate the matter.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee has neither the jurisdiction nor the staff to conduct an investigation. As such, the following remarks will involve the treatment of your request under the Freedom of Information Law.

First, although the Freedom of Information Law as originally enacted required that an applicant seek "identifiable" records, since 1978, §89(3) of that statute has stated that an applicant must "reasonably describe" the records sought. In considering that standard, the State's highest court has found that requested records need not be "specifically designated", that to meet the standard, the terms of a request must be adequate to enable the agency to locate the records, and that an agency must "establish that 'the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought'...before denying a FOIL request for reasons of overbreadth" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

Although it was found in the decision cited above that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth, it was also stated that:

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency']" (id. at 250).

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping systems. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

In the context of your request, I am unaware of the means by which the Office of the District Attorney maintains records falling within the scope of your request. If that agency maintains all such records in a file or group of files that are retrievable on the basis of the terms of your request, I believe that you would have met the requirement that the records be reasonably described.

Second, and perhaps most importantly, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. It is emphasized that the introductory language of §87(2) refers to the authority to withhold "records or portions thereof" that fall within the scope of the exceptions that follow. In my view, the phrase quoted in the preceding sentence evidences a recognition on the part of the Legislature that a single record or report, for example, might include portions that are available under the statute, as well as portions that might justifiably be withheld. That being so, I believe that it also imposes an obligation on an agency to review records sought, in their entirety, to determine which portions, if any, might properly be withheld or deleted prior to disclosing the remainder.

Insofar as records were disclosed to you in the past, I do not believe that the Office of the District Attorney could now choose to withhold those same records.

With respect to the remainder of the records falling within the scope of your request, the Court of Appeals expressed its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law most recently in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY 2d 267 (1996)], stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the agency contended that complaint follow up reports, also known as "DD5's", could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g). The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276). The Court then stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, directing that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

In the context of your request, the records have been withheld in their entirety. Rather than citing only §87(2)(g) as a basis for a blanket denial of access to the records at issue as in Gould, the Office of the District Attorney engaged in a blanket denial alluding to other provisions in a manner which, in my view, is equally inappropriate. I am not suggesting that the records sought must be disclosed in full. Rather, based on the direction given by the Court of Appeals in several decisions, the records must be reviewed for the purpose of identifying those portions of the records that might fall within the scope of one or more of the grounds for denial of access. As the Court stated later in the decision: "Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" (id., 277; emphasis added).

There is no question but that some of the records sought constitute inter-agency or intra-agency materials that fall within the scope of §87(2)(g). However, due to its structure, that provision frequently requires substantial disclosure. Specifically, §87(2)(g) states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different basis for denial is applicable. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. It would appear that the records sought would consist of instructions to staff that affect the public or an agency's policy. Therefore, I believe that they would be available, unless a different basis for denial could be asserted.

A second provision of potential significance is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations of judicial proceedings...
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or

iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

Only to the extent that the harmful effects of disclosure described in subparagraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e) does an agency have the authority to deny access to records. It would appear that any investigation of your complaint has been terminated. If that is so, the primary exception in §87(2)(e), the provision dealing with interference with an investigation, would likely be irrelevant.

Section 87(2)(b) permits an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure would result in "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." Frequently, names or other personally identifying details may be deleted to protect privacy, in which case the remainder of a record may be available.

Section 87(2)(a) pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." The denial merely referred to that provision; it does not cite any statute that would exempt the records of your interest from disclosure.

Lastly, §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law pertains to the right to appeal a denial of access to records and states in relevant part that:

It has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Nathan McBride
95-A-6015
354 Hunter Street
Ossining, NY 10562-5442

Dear Mr. McBride:

I have received your letter of August 9. You referred to denials of your requests for records by the office of a district attorney on the ground that the records had previously been furnished to your attorney. You wrote, however, that your requests made under the Freedom of Information Law to your attorney have not been answered.

In this regard, first, the records maintained by your attorney are likely not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. That statute pertains to agency records, and §86 (3) defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Based on the foregoing, the Freedom of Information Law generally applies to records maintained by governmental entities. Unless your attorney is a public defender, i.e., a county employee, it is unlikely that the attorney would be subject to the Freedom of Information Law.

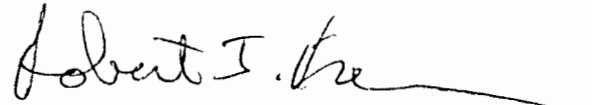

Second, as indicated to you in a letter of December 8, 1997, based on the decision rendered in Moore v. Santucci [151 AD2d 677 (1989)], if a record was made available to you or your attorney, there must be a demonstration that neither you nor your attorney possesses the record in order to successfully obtain a second copy. Specifically, the decision states that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

In view of the foregoing, it is suggested that you contact your attorney to determine whether he or she continues to possess the record. If the attorney no longer maintains the record, he or she should prepare an affidavit so stating that can be submitted to the office of the district attorney. Alternatively, if your attorney fails to answer, it is suggested that you document such failure and present it to the office of its district attorney as by means of demonstrating that you have no way of obtaining the records previously disclosed to your attorney.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman
Executive Director

Ms. Regina LaNoce

Dear Ms. LaNoce:

As you are aware, your letter of August 9 addressed to Attorney General Spitzer has been forwarded to the Committee on Open Government. The Committee, a unit of the Department of State, is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law.

According to your correspondence, you wrote to Assemblyman Jeffrion Aubry, Chairman of the Assembly Committee on Corrections, and requested certain minutes of meetings of the Committee. As of the date of your letter to the Attorney General, you had received no response and you asked whether Assemblyman Aubry is "required, by law, to provide [you] with the information...within a reasonable amount of time."

In this regard, pursuant to the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests, and requests should generally be made to that person. Although the Assembly is not an "agency" (see Freedom of Information Law, §86), it has adopted rules and procedures that include the designation of a records access officer. In my view, the Assemblyman should either have responded to your request directly or forwarded the request to the Assembly's records access officer, Ms. Sharon Walsh. With this response to you, I will forward a copy of your request to her.

For future reference, I note that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which an entity must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

September 9, 1999

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an entity delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Harvey M. Elentuck

Dear Mr. Elentuck:

I have received your postcard in which you sought advice.

According to your correspondence, the records access officer at the Office of Labor Relations of the New York City Board of Education has granted your request to inspect records, "138,000 pages of one type of record category and 30,000 pages of a different type of record category." However, you wrote that "he is seeking to impose a time limit of 4 additional sessions at 4 hours per session." You wrote that you "want a reasonable amount of time to finish reading the material" (emphasis yours).

In this regard, in my experience relating to the Freedom of Information Law, I have not encountered a situation in which a request has been made and granted with respect to so large a volume of material. From my perspective, the primary issue involves the reasonableness of the response in conjunction with attendant facts. I am unaware of the manner in which the records are maintained, whether you have been given the authority to browse through all of the two categories of records, whether they must be physically retrieved for you on each occasion in which you seek to read them, whether they may be in use by agency staff, etc. In short, whether the limitation in terms of the number of "sessions" during which you may read the records is valid is in my view dependent on the reasonableness of the agency's response in conjunction with the kinds of factors mentioned.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, when a date that is mutually convenient to you and the agency for your inspection of the records, I believe that you may read them during the entirety of the agency's regular business hours.

By way of background, §89(1)(b)(iii) of the Freedom of Information Law requires the Committee to promulgate regulations concerning the procedural implementation of the Law (see 21 NYCRR Part 1401). In turn, §87(1) requires agencies to adopt rules and regulations consistent with the Law and the Committee's regulations.

Section 1401.2 of the regulations, provides in relevant part that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation and the head of an executive agency or governing body of other agencies shall be responsible for insuring compliance with the regulations herein, and shall designate one or more persons as records access officer by name or by specific job title and business address, who shall have the duty of coordinating agency response to public requests for access to records. The designation of one or more records access officers shall not be construed to prohibit officials who have in the past been authorized to make records or information available to the public from continuing to do so..."

Section 1401.4 of the regulations, entitled "Hours for public inspection", states that:

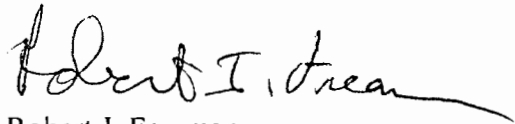

"(a) Each agency shall accept requests for public access to records and produce records during all hours they are regularly open for business."

Relevant to your inquiry and the foregoing is a decision rendered by the Appellate Division, Second Department. Among the issues was the validity of a similar limitation regarding the time permitted to inspect records established by a village pursuant to regulation. The Court held that the village was required to enable the public to inspect records during its regular business hours, stating that:

"...to the extent that Regulation 6 has been interpreted as permitting the Village Clerk to limit the hours during which public documents can be inspected to a period of time less than the business hours of the Clerk's office, it is violative of the Freedom of Information Law..."
[Murtha v. Leonard, 620 NYS 2d 101 (1994), 210 AD 2d 411].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Isaac:

I have received your letters of August 3 and August 26 concerning the certification of records obtained from the New York City Police Department.

In my view, the Freedom of Information Law does not require that an agency provide a certification as envisioned by that statute unless asked to do so. As you are likely aware, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in relevant part that, in response to a request for a record, "the entity shall provide a copy of such record and certify to the correctness of such copy if so requested..." From my perspective, the certification required by the Freedom of Information Law does not involve an assertion that the contents of a record are accurate, but rather that a copy of a record made available in response to a request is a true copy. In essence, the certification is supposed to signify that the applicant received an actual copy of a record maintained by an agency, irrespective of the contents of the record.

In short, whether to seek a certification in accordance with §89(3) is your choice.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dannemora, NY 12929-2001

Dear Mr. Bernardo:

I have received your letter of August 5 in which you sought guidance in your efforts in obtaining your medical records from Harlem Hospital.

In this regard, since Harlem Hospital is part of the New York City Health and Hospitals Corporation, I believe that its records are subject to the Freedom of Information Law. In terms of rights granted by that statute, it is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

With regard to medical records, the Freedom of Information Law, in my view, likely permits that some of those records may be withheld in whole or in part, depending upon their contents. For instance, medical records prepared by hospital personnel could be characterized as "intra-agency materials" that fall within the scope of §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law. To the extent that such materials consist of advice, opinion, recommendation and the like, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law would permit a denial.

Nevertheless, a different statute, §18 of the Public Health Law, generally grants rights of access to medical records to the subjects of the records. As such, that statute may provide greater access to medical records than the Freedom of Information Law. It is suggested that you send your request to the hospital and make specific reference to §18 of the Public Health Law when seeking medical records.

To obtain additional information concerning access to medical records and the fees that may be charged for searching and copying those records, you may write to:

New York, NY 1001-4010

Dear Mr. Lindsay:

I have received your letter of August 5. You indicated that you sent requests to the New York City Department of Transportation on July 14 and July 27, but that as of the date of your letter to this office, you had neither been granted access to the records sought nor informed of the approximate date when the request would be granted. You wrote that "[t]his has been a long standing problem at NYCDOT" and asked that I inform that agency that is "not in compliance with law."

In this regard, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in relevant part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

It has been held that agency officials "did not conform to the mandates" of the provision quoted above "when they did not...furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of...requests along with a statement of the approximate date when action would be taken" [Newton v. Police Department, 585 NYS2d 5, 8, 183 AD2d 621 (1992), emphasis added].

In a case that described an experience that may be similar to yours, the court cited §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law and wrote that:

"The acknowledgement letters in this proceeding neither granted nor denied petitioner's request nor approximated a determination date. Rather, the letters were open ended as to time as they stated, 'that a period of time would be required to ascertain whether such documents do exist, and if they did, whether they qualify for inspection.

"This court finds that respondent's actions and/or inactions placed petitioner in a "Catch 22" position. The petitioner, relying on the respondent's representation, anticipated a determination to her request...this court finds that this petitioner should not be penalized for respondent's failure to comply with Public Officers Law §89 (3), especially when petitioner was advised by respondent that a decision concerning her application would be forthcoming.

It should also be noted that petitioner did not sit idle during this period but rather made numerous efforts to obtain a decision from respondent including the submission of a follow up letter to the Records Access Officer and submission of various requests for said records with the Department of Transportation" (Bernstein v. City of New York, Supreme Court, Supreme Court, New York County, November 7, 1990).

In Bernstein, the court determined that the agency "is stopped from asserting that this proceeding is improper due to petitioner's failure to appeal the denial of access to records within 30 days to the agency head, as provided in Public Officers Law, §89(4)(a)."

Based on the foregoing, I believe that your requests have been constructively denied and that you may appeal the denials pursuant to §89(4)(a). That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reason for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Alternatively, based on the holding in Bernstein, it appears that you could seek judicial review of the denials now. I suggest, however, that you appeal in an effort to avoid the time and cost of litigation.

Lastly, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of the Freedom of Information Law, a copy of this response will be forwarded to the Department's records access officer.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Southport Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 2000
Pine City, NY 14871

Dear Mr. Thompson:

I have received your letter of August 9 concerning an unanswered request under the Freedom of Information Law that you directed to the Attica Correctional Facility.

In this regard, first, having reviewed your request, some elements of the request are, in my view, inconsistent with the Freedom of Information Law. For instance, you wrote that you "would like to know what are the state laws and rules governing videotaping inmates being escorted to the S.H.U." In my view, that kind of inquiry involves a judgment or interpretation concerning the applicability of law; I do not believe that it constitutes a request for records as envisioned by the Freedom of Information Law. Any number of laws or rules might be pertinent, and individuals may disagree as to their application. In contrast, a request for a particular section of law or policy would, in my opinion, constitute a valid request.

Second, when a proper request is made, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which an agency must respond. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

Mr. Hasheen Thompson

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

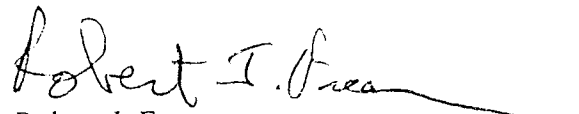

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

For your information, the person designated by the Department of Correctional Services to determine appeals is Anthony J. Annucci, Counsel to the Department.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Woodbourne Correctional Facility
Woodbourne, NY 12788

Dear Mr. King:

I have received your letter of August 8 in which you sought my views concerning two issues relating to the Freedom of Information Law.

With respect to the first, having received your parole summary, you read that it stated that you need drug counseling, even though you contend that you do not have a drug problem. When you asked the parole officer at your facility how he determined that drug treatment was warranted, you wrote that "after he reviewed [your] guidance folder, which is maintained by the Department of Corrections (DOCS), he found a document in which [you] stated [you] had 'panic attacks related to cocaine abuse'." You then "asked him under FOIL to identify the document and/or to send [you] a copy." He indicated that you should "take it up with the DOCS."

In my view, if the parole officer has possession of the record in question, even though it might have been prepared by a different agency, he would be obliged to respond to a request made under the Freedom of Information Law. That statute pertains to all agency records, and §86(4) defines the term "record" to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Mr. Philip King
September 9, 1999

Based on the foregoing, if two or more agencies possess the same record, each would be responsible for answering a request made under the Freedom of Information Law. On the other hand, if the parole officer merely read a record maintained by the Department of Correctional Services and does not possess a copy, he would have no obligation, in my opinion, to answer your question or obtain a copy for you.

The second area of inquiry relates to testimony by internal affairs officers at your trial regarding "the possible involvement of a police officer in your case." It appears that you are referring to the unit in the New York City Police Department.

I believe that requests for records concerning the activities of the Internal Affairs unit should be made to the New York City Police Department's records access officer, Sgt. Richard Evangelista at One Police Plaza.

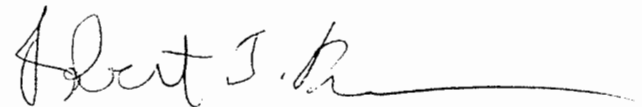

Assuming that the reports of your interest concern possible misconduct on the part of a police officer, it is likely in my view that they may be withheld.

As you may be aware, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §50-a of the Civil Rights Law. In brief, that statute provides that personnel records of police and correction officers that are used to evaluate performance toward continued employment or promotion are confidential. If my understanding of the matter is accurate, §50-a of the Civil Rights Law would serve to remove the records from the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Ms. Dorothy M. Watson

Dear Ms. Watson:

I have received your undated letter, which reached this office on August 13. You have sought an advisory opinion concerning a request made to the City of Tonawanda School District.

In an appeal submitted on July 14, you wrote that the records that "were not provided" are as follows:

"...I want the grades of students grouped by teacher who have passed the regents, failed the course, the course that was failed, the specific teacher, and the marks given the student each quarter for the past three years. In addition I want every individual regent grade, the corresponding quarterly marks, the final average corresponding to each regent grade by teacher for the high school."

You specified that you did not want students' names, and you provided a table to be filled out that would include the information sought. The original request was apparently denied based on a contention that the records sought do not exist, which you find "impossible to believe."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and that §89(3) of that statute states in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, District officials would not be obliged to prepare a new record by completing the table that you provided. Further, I would conjecture that the information in which you are interested exists, but not in the format or with the combination of items in which you requested it. It is suggested that you confer with District officials to ascertain the manner in which

Second, as you inferred in your appeal, insofar as District records are identifiable to students, they must be withheld. Relevant to the matter is the initial ground for denial, §87(2)(a), which pertains to records that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." In this instance, insofar as disclosure of the records in question would or could identify a student or students, I believe that they must be withheld. A statute that exempts records from disclosure is the Family Education Rights and Privacy Act (20 U.S.C. section 1232g), which is commonly known as "FERPA." In brief, FERPA applies to all educational agencies or institutions that participate in grant programs administered by the United States Department of Education. As such, FERPA includes within its scope virtually all public educational institutions and many private educational institutions. The focal point of the Act is the protection of privacy of students. It provides, in general, that any "education record," a term that is broadly defined, that is personally identifiable to a particular student or students is confidential, unless the parents of students under the age of eighteen waive their right to confidentiality, or unless a student eighteen years or over similarly waives his or her right to confidentiality. Further, the federal regulations promulgated under FERPA define the phrase "personally identifiable information" to include:

- "(a) The student's name;
- (b) The name of the student's parents or other family member;
- (c) The address of the student or student's family;
- (d) A personal identifier, such as the student's social security number or student number;
- (e) A list of personal characteristics that would make the student's identity easily traceable; or
- (f) Other information that would make the student's identity easily traceable" (34 CFR Section 99.3).

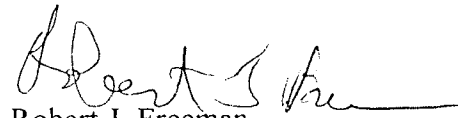

Based upon the foregoing, references to students' names or other aspects of records that would make a student's identity easily traceable must in my view be withheld in order to comply with federal law.

In a case dealing with a request that may be analogous to yours, an applicant sought records of test scores that were prepared by class in alphabetical order. The school district contended that, even if names of students were deleted, because the lists were maintained alphabetically, the identities of some students might be made known. In determining the issue, the Court ordered that names be deleted from the records and that the records be "scrambled" in order to protect against the possible identification of students [Kryston v. East Ramapo School District, 77 AD 2d 896 (1980)]. In that decision, the district was required to disclose the grades in a manner in which students' identities were protected. Stated differently, the grades were required to be disclosed, but any identifying details pertaining to students were required to have been withheld.

Alden, NY 14004-1187

Dear Mr. McKissick:

I have received your letter of August 5. As I understand your remarks, you are interested in obtaining records relating to certain judicial proceedings.

It appears that the primary source of the records of your interest would be the court in which the proceedings were conducted. In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law, the statute within the advisory jurisdiction of the Committee on Open Government, is applicable to agency records. Section 86(3) of that statute defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. It is recommended that a request for court records be directed to the clerk of the court in which the proceeding was conducted, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

Ms. Josephine P. Dority
Clerk-Treasurer
Village of Ravena
15 Mountain Road
Ravena, NY 12143

Dear Ms. Dority:

I have received your letter of August 9 and a copy of correspondence sent to you by Mr. Laszlo Polyak on August 6 concerning his requests under the Freedom of Information Law. You wrote that you "do not know what to do and do not know exactly what he is asking for." You asked that I provide guidance "[i]f [I] can figure out what he is trying to say."

Having reviewed Mr. Polyak's letter, I offer the following comments.

In his first paragraph, Mr. Polyak indicated that he has not yet received all of the zoning and Planning Board minutes that he requested and suggested that in one request, he sought minutes of the Zoning Board rather than the Planning Board. In this regard, as you are aware, minutes of meetings of public bodies are clearly available under the Freedom of Information Law. If the minutes of the two boards are maintained in a manner in which they can be reviewed or easily copied, i.e. if they are kept in chronological order in a looseleaf binder, a file drawer, a minute book, etc., it is suggested that you enable Mr. Polyak to inspect them. Based on such a review, he could identify those for which he might want copies, and you could then make copies following his payment of the proper fee.

The second paragraph appears to refer to an opinion that I prepared in which it was advised, based on a judicial decision, that records must be made available for inspection during regular business hours. This is not to suggest that you or others are required to suspend your other work to instantly accommodate a person seeking records under the Freedom of Information Law. If records are in use by staff or if you are unable to make records available on a certain day or during a certain period of time, access may in my view be delayed to a date that is mutually convenient to you and the applicant. On that date, however, I do not believe that there could be a limitation on the time to review records to less than regular business hours.

In the third paragraph, reference is made to questions relating to variances. While I am unfamiliar with the questions, it is noted that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and that §89 (3) of the Law provides in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. As such, the obligation of an agency under the Freedom of Information Law involves providing access to existing records; it does not require that agency officials answer questions or prepare new records in an effort to respond to questions.

As I understand his comments, Mr. Polyak is seeking "hard copies of the public notices as published" relative to hearings and variances, as well as "cover letter" indicating when legal notices were placed and when variances were filed after being granted. In my view, you would not be required by the Freedom of Information Law to prepare a "cover letter" containing the information sought. Again, your obligation under the Freedom of Information Law involves providing existing records. If existing records include the information sought, I believe that they should be disclosed. If the Village does not maintain the information in its records, Mr. Polyak should be so informed.

The fourth paragraph in my view consists of a commentary rather than a request for records, and in the fifth, the only clear reference to a request for records pertains to "ZBA maps." Again, if the maps in question exist and can be found, I believe that they should be made available.

Mr. Polyak has suggested that responses to his requests have been delayed. In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

While an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Another issue appears to involve the clarity or perhaps absence of clarity of his requests. Here I point out that §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. I point out that it has been held by the Court of Appeals that to deny a request on the ground that it fails to reasonably describe the records, an agency must establish that "the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

September 9, 1999

The Court in Konigsberg found that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth and also stated that:

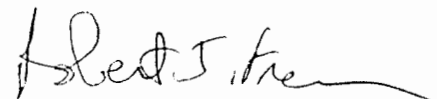

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency'])" (id. at 250).

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping system. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

While I am unfamiliar with the Village's recordkeeping systems, to the extent that the records sought can be located with reasonable effort, I believe that the requests would meet the requirement of reasonably describing the records. On the other hand, if the records are not maintained in a manner that permits their retrieval except by reviewing perhaps hundreds or thousands of records individually in an effort to locate those falling within the scope of a request, to that extent, a request would not in my opinion meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Ms. Lorraine O. Taylor

Dear Ms. Taylor:

I have received your letter of August 20 and the materials attached to it. As a member of the Institutional Review Board (IRB) for Hutchings Psychiatric Center, you have questioned the legality and scope of a confidentiality agreement that IRB members are apparently required to sign. The agreement includes examples of information characterized as or "reasonably understood" to be confidential and provides that members "agree not to discuss, disclose, or reproduce any confidential information except to carry out [their] functions as an IRB member, or as otherwise required by law." In addition, a memorandum from the Research Foundation for Mental Hygiene, Inc. concerning confidentiality states that "IRB members have a legal and ethical duty to maintain the confidentiality of all information they receive in their capacity as members of the IRB."

You raised questions concerning the need to sign the agreement.

In this regard, the general functions of the Committee on Open Government involve offering advice and opinions concerning public access to and the disclosure of government information, primarily under the Freedom of Information and Personal Privacy Protection Laws. Consequently, the question of whether you "need to sign this confidentiality agreement" is beyond the jurisdiction of this office. However, I offer the following comments relating to the agreement and the notion of "confidentiality."

First, in general, I believe that the records and other information that come into the possession of IRB members are acquired in the performance of their official duties that are carried out directly or otherwise for the Office of Mental Health. By means of example, the letter that you sent to me may be in my physical possession, but it is in the legal custody of the Department of State. In the same vein, the information acquired by IRB members in the performance of their duties is, in my view, the property of the state, and outside the authority of the members to disclose in their discretion.

The Freedom of Information Law, in terms of its coverage, is consistent with the foregoing, for it pertains to "agency records." Section 86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" expansively to mean:

"...any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

In a decision rendered by the state's highest court, the Court of Appeals, the matter involved records in possession of a not-for-profit corporation that carried out certain functions for the State University pursuant to contract and it was held that the records were held for the University and, therefore, were agency records that fell within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law, even though they were not in the physical custody of the University [see Encore College Bookstores, Inc. v. Auxiliary Services Corporation of the State University, 87 NY2d 410 (1995)]. In like manner, materials acquired or prepared by IRB members would be maintained for the Office of Mental Health and would constitute agency records.

While I believe that the Research Foundation of Mental Hygiene, Inc. is an agency that falls within the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law [see e.g., Buffalo News v. Buffalo Enterprise Development Corp., 84 NY2d 488 (1994)], irrespective of that issue, my understanding is that its functions are performed for one or more agencies, such as the Office of Mental Health, and that, therefore, its records are maintained for an agency and are subject to rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law.

In short, I believe that the records that come into the possession of IRB members are in the legal custody and control of an agency.

Second, although the use of the term "confidentiality" in the agreement is not entirely clear, the agreement, in general, does not appear to be inconsistent with law. Insofar as there may be inconsistency, I do not believe that it would be valid or enforceable. I note, too, that a statement cited earlier in the memorandum is broader, in my opinion, than the agreement itself. As indicated previously, the memorandum states in part that "IRB members have legal and ethical duty to maintain the confidentiality of all information they receive in their capacity as members..." The agreement itself, however, involves the discussion, disclosure, or reproduction of "confidential information". The term "confidential" is not defined, but examples of information "reasonably understood" to be confidential are described, such as human subject identifying data, proprietary information, medical information and the like.

From my perspective, based on judicial decisions, an assertion or promise of confidentiality, unless it is based upon a statute, is generally meaningless. When confidentiality is conferred by a statute, an act of the State Legislature or Congress, records fall outside the scope of rights of access pursuant to §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states that an agency may withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". If there is no statute upon which an agency can rely to characterize records as "confidential" or "exempted from disclosure", the records are subject to whatever rights of access exist under the Freedom of Information Law [see Doolan v. BOCES, 48 NY 2d 341 (1979); Washington Post v. Insurance Department, 61 NY 2d 557 (1984); Gannett News Service, Inc. v. State Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse, 415 NYS 2d 780 (1979)]. As such, an assertion or promise of confidentiality, without more, would not in my view serve to enable an agency to withhold a record.

In the context of the kinds of records that may be pertinent to the duties of the Foundation, the IRB's and the Office of Mental Health, a statute that requires confidentiality is §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law. That statute essentially prohibits the disclosure of clinical records identifiable to a person receiving treatment except in circumstances that it prescribes. When records fall within the confidentiality requirements imposed by §33.13, they would be "specifically exempted from disclosure by...statute" in accordance with §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law.

Also pertinent to the duties of those concerned may be the Personal Privacy Protection Law, which deals in part with the disclosure of records or personal information by state agencies concerning data subjects. A "data subject" is "any natural person about whom personal information has been collected by an agency" [Personal Privacy Protection Law, §92(3)]. "Personal information" is defined to mean "any information concerning a data subject which, because of name, number, symbol, mark or other identifier, can be used to identify that data subject" [§92(7)]. For purposes of that statute, the term "record" is defined to mean "any item, collection or grouping of personal information about a data subject which is maintained and is retrievable by use of the name or other identifier of the data subject" [§92(9)].

With respect to disclosure, §96(1) of the Personal Privacy Protection Law states that "No agency may disclose any record or personal information", except in conjunction with a series of exceptions that follow. One of those exceptions involves a situation in which a record is "subject to article six of this chapter [the Freedom of Information Law], unless disclosure of such information would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as defined in paragraph (a) of subdivision two of section eighty-nine of this chapter." Section 89(2-a) of the Freedom of Information Law states that "Nothing in this article shall permit disclosure which constitutes an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as defined in subdivision two of this section if such disclosure is prohibited under section ninety-six of this chapter." Therefore, when a state agency cannot disclose records pursuant to §96 of the Personal Protection Law, it is precluded from disclosing under the Freedom of Information Law.

When either §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law or the Personal Privacy Protection Law applies, there is essentially no discretion to disclose to the public. In other circumstances, however, although records may be withheld, there is no obligation to do so.

Reference is made in the materials to "proprietary rights." Depending on the effects of disclosure, so-called "proprietary" information might properly be withheld under §87(2)(d) of the Freedom of Information Law. Nevertheless, unlike the provisions cited above, under §87(2)(d) and the remaining grounds for denial in the Freedom of Information Law, there is nothing in law that would prohibit disclosure. Section 87(2)(d) permits (but does not require) an agency to withhold records or portions that:

“are trade secrets or are submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise or derived from information obtained from a commercial enterprise and which if disclosed would cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the subject enterprise...”

The mere characterization of a record as “proprietary” or as a trade secret, like a claim of confidentiality, may be without substance unless there is a provision of law upon which it can be based; the capacity to deny access involves the extent to which disclosure “would cause substantial injury to the competitive position” of a commercial enterprise.

As I interpret the memorandum, a key element involves the “standards and procedures” that have been implemented to deal with requests for and the disclosure of records. Section 89(1) of the Freedom of Information Law requires the Committee on Open Government to promulgate regulations concerning the procedural implementation of that statute (21 NYCRR Part 1401). In turn, §87(1) requires the head or governing body of an agency to adopt rules and regulations consistent those promulgated by the Committee and with the Freedom of Information Law. Section 1401.2 of the regulations provides in relevant part that:

“(a) The governing body of a public corporation and the head of an executive agency or governing body of other agencies shall be responsible for insuring compliance with the regulations herein, and shall designate one or more persons as records access officer by name or by specific job title and business address, who shall have the duty of coordinating agency response to public requests for access to records. The designation of one or more records access officers shall not be construed to prohibit officials who have in the past been authorized to make records or information available to the public from continuing to do so.”

Based on the foregoing, I believe that the records access officer has the duty of coordinating responses to requests.

From my perspective, it is routine to limit the authority of agency personnel and others to make disclosures on their own initiative or in response to requests. In many agencies, requests for records are forwarded as a matter of policy to the designated records access officer in order that he or she can make an initial determination to grant or deny access in accordance with applicable law. The direction given in the memorandum appears to be consistent with that kind of procedure.

In sum, it is likely that many of the records used or maintained by IRB members may be confidential”, but that would be so only when a statute prohibits disclosure. In other instances, there may be discretion to withhold under the Freedom of Information Law, but no legal obligation to do so. Perhaps most importantly, the Freedom of Information Law requires agencies to adopt regulations regarding the procedural implementation of the law. In accordance with such a procedure, one or more "records access officers" may be given the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests and disclosure practices. Unless authority to disclose is otherwise granted to persons other than the records access officer, limiting the ability of those other persons to disclose is, in my opinion, within the discretion of an agency. I note, too, that there is nothing in the agreement which, in my view, limits access by IRB members or which in any way limits public rights of access in a manner inconsistent with law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Ms. Carole Hayes Collier

Dear Ms. Collier:

I have received your letter of August 20 and the materials attached to it. As a member of the Institutional Review Board (IRB) for Hutchings Psychiatric Center, you have questioned the legality and scope of a confidentiality agreement that IRB members are apparently required to sign. The agreement includes examples of information characterized as or "reasonably understood" to be confidential and provides that members "agree not to discuss, disclose, or reproduce any confidential information except to carry out [their] functions as an IRB member, or as otherwise required by law." In addition, a memorandum from the Research Foundation for Mental Hygiene, Inc. concerning confidentiality states that "IRB members have a legal and ethical duty to maintain the confidentiality of all information they receive in their capacity as members of the IRB."

You asked that I advise "as to whether [you] need to sign this confidentiality statement or challenge it as being too restrictive."

In this regard, the general functions of the Committee on Open Government involve offering advice and opinions concerning public access to and the disclosure of government information, primarily under the Freedom of Information and Personal Privacy Protection Laws. Consequently, the question of whether you "need to sign this confidentiality agreement" is beyond the jurisdiction of this office. However, I offer the following comments relating to the agreement and the notion of "confidentiality."

First, in general, I believe that the records and other information that come into the possession of IRB members are acquired in the performance of their official duties that are carried out directly or otherwise for the Office of Mental Health. By means of example, the letter that you sent to me may be in my physical possession, but it is in the legal custody of the Department of State. In the same vein, the information acquired by IRB members in the performance of their duties is, in my view, the property of the state, and outside the authority of the members to disclose in their discretion.

The Freedom of Information Law, in terms of its coverage, is consistent with the foregoing, for it pertains to "agency records." Section 86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" expansively to mean:

"...any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

In a decision rendered by the state's highest court, the Court of Appeals, the matter involved records in possession of a not-for-profit corporation that carried out certain functions for the State University pursuant to contract and it was held that the records were held for the University and, therefore, were agency records that fell within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law, even though they were not in the physical custody of the University [see Encore College Bookstores, Inc. v. Auxiliary Services Corporation of the State University, 87 NY2d 410 (1995)]. In like manner, materials acquired or prepared by IRB members would be maintained for the Office of Mental Health and would constitute agency records.

While I believe that the Research Foundation of Mental Hygiene, Inc. is an agency that falls within the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law [see e.g., Buffalo News v. Buffalo Enterprise Development Corp., 84 NY2d 488 (1994)], irrespective of that issue, my understanding is that its functions are performed for one or more agencies, such as the Office of Mental Health, and that, therefore, its records are maintained for an agency and are subject to rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law.

In short, I believe that the records that come into the possession of IRB members are in the legal custody and control of an agency.

Second, although the use of the term "confidentiality" in the agreement is not entirely clear, the agreement, in general, does not appear to be inconsistent with law. Insofar as there may be inconsistency, I do not believe that it would be valid or enforceable. I note, too, that a statement cited earlier in the memorandum is broader, in my opinion, than the agreement itself. As indicated previously, the memorandum states in part that "IRB members have legal and ethical duty to maintain the confidentiality of all information they receive in their capacity as members..." The agreement itself, however, involves the discussion, disclosure, or reproduction of "confidential information". The term "confidential" is not defined, but examples of information "reasonably understood" to be confidential are described, such as human subject identifying data, proprietary information, medical information and the like.

From my perspective, based on judicial decisions, an assertion or promise of confidentiality, unless it is based upon a statute, is generally meaningless. When confidentiality is conferred by a statute, an act of the State Legislature or Congress, records fall outside the scope of rights of access pursuant to §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states that an agency may withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". If there is no statute upon which an agency can rely to characterize records as "confidential" or "exempted from disclosure", the records are subject to whatever rights of access exist under the Freedom of Information Law [see Doolan v. BOCES, 48 NY 2d 341 (1979); Washington Post v. Insurance Department, 61 NY 2d 557 (1984); Gannett News Service, Inc. v. State Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse, 415 NYS 2d 780 (1979)]. As such, an assertion or promise of confidentiality, without more, would not in my view serve to enable an agency to withhold a record.

In the context of the kinds of records that may be pertinent to the duties of the Foundation, the IRB's and the Office of Mental Health, a statute that requires confidentiality is §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law. That statute essentially prohibits the disclosure of clinical records identifiable to a person receiving treatment except in circumstances that it prescribes. When records fall within the confidentiality requirements imposed by §33.13, they would be "specifically exempted from disclosure by...statute" in accordance with §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law.

Also pertinent to the duties of those concerned may be the Personal Privacy Protection Law, which deals in part with the disclosure of records or personal information by state agencies concerning data subjects. A "data subject" is "any natural person about whom personal information has been collected by an agency" [Personal Privacy Protection Law, §92(3)]. "Personal information" is defined to mean "any information concerning a data subject which, because of name, number, symbol, mark or other identifier, can be used to identify that data subject" [§92(7)]. For purposes of that statute, the term "record" is defined to mean "any item, collection or grouping of personal information about a data subject which is maintained and is retrievable by use of the name or other identifier of the data subject" [§92(9)].

With respect to disclosure, §96(1) of the Personal Privacy Protection Law states that "No agency may disclose any record or personal information", except in conjunction with a series of exceptions that follow. One of those exceptions involves a situation in which a record is "subject to article six of this chapter [the Freedom of Information Law], unless disclosure of such information would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as defined in paragraph (a) of subdivision two of section eighty-nine of this chapter." Section 89(2-a) of the Freedom of Information Law states that "Nothing in this article shall permit disclosure which constitutes an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as defined in subdivision two of this section if such disclosure is prohibited under section ninety-six of this chapter." Therefore, when a state agency cannot disclose records pursuant to §96 of the Personal Protection Law, it is precluded from disclosing under the Freedom of Information Law.

When either §33.13 of the Mental Hygiene Law or the Personal Privacy Protection Law applies, there is essentially no discretion to disclose to the public. In other circumstances, however, although records may be withheld, there is no obligation to do so.

Reference is made in the materials to "proprietary rights." Depending on the effects of disclosure, so-called "proprietary" information might properly be withheld under §87(2)(d) of the Freedom of Information Law. Nevertheless, unlike the provisions cited above, under §87(2)(d) and the remaining grounds for denial in the Freedom of Information Law, there is nothing in law that would prohibit disclosure. Section 87(2)(d) permits (but does not require) an agency to withhold records or portions that:

“are trade secrets or are submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise or derived from information obtained from a commercial enterprise and which if disclosed would cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the subject enterprise...”

The mere characterization of a record as “proprietary” or as a trade secret, like a claim of confidentiality, may be without substance unless there is a provision of law upon which it can be based; the capacity to deny access involves the extent to which disclosure “would cause substantial injury to the competitive position” of a commercial enterprise.

Ms. Shawn Schultz
Citizen's Against the Dump
P.O. Box 93
Pattersonville, NY 12137

Dear Ms. Schultz:

I have received your undated letter, which reached this office on August 10.

You have sought an advisory opinion concerning a request made to the Town of Rotterdam on July 12 for the "Draft of the Sterling/Spectra Leachate investigation and remediation study of the Rotterdam MSW Landfill." You wrote that the request was denied on July 30 and that you appealed "on that same day." On August 2, you were informed that the Town Engineer, in your words, "had destroyed the draft since it was a draft and not a finalized report." You added that "[s]he was well aware this draft was under foil as [you] and the records access officer had been in touch with her on repeated occasions."

You have raised the following questions in relation to the foregoing:

- a) Did the town have the obligation to provide all or certain parts of the draft?
- b) Is this draft covered by attorney client privilege since a lawyer hired by the town reviewed it?
- c) What document is needed to prove the record no longer exists?
- d) If the record was destroyed what remedies are available to us?"

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, questions (a) and (b) will be considered together, for they both deal essentially with whether or the extent to which the draft should have been made available.

It is emphasized at the outset that the Freedom of Information Law, as a general matter, is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Further, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to all agency records, and that §86(4) defines the term "record" expansively to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, I believe that the draft clearly constituted a town record that fell within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law.

With respect to the attorney-client privilege, the fact that an attorney may have been retained to review a record would not alter the character of the record or transform it into privileged material. By means of example, if an attorney is hired to review public records, such as minutes of meetings, a developer's plans to construct a new building, or assessment records, his or her review of those records would in no way affect the public's right to obtain them under the Freedom of Information Law; again, the content, the character and the purpose for which the records were prepared would not change.

As I understand the matter, the draft was not prepared by or at the direction of an attorney retained by the Town. If that is so, the attorney client privilege would not be pertinent.

If records are prepared by or for an attorney, as in the case of a report prepared for litigation by an expert, they may be beyond the scope of rights of access. The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." When records are subject to the attorney-client privilege, they would be exempted from disclosure under §4503 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules (CPLR). Another statute that exempts records from disclosure is §3101(d) of the Civil Practice Law and Rules, which exempts material prepared for litigation from disclosure. It is emphasized, however, that it has been determined judicially that if records are prepared for multiple purposes, one of which includes eventual use in litigation, §3101(d) does not serve as a basis for withholding records; only when records are prepared solely for litigation can §3101(d) be properly asserted to deny access to records [see e.g., Westchester-Rockland Newspapers v. Mosczydlowski, 58 AD 2d 234 (1977)].

Again, as I interpret your comments, the draft was not prepared by or at the direction of an attorney, nor was it prepared solely for litigation. If that is so, neither §87(2)(a) nor the attorney-client privilege would in my view have authorized the Town to withhold the draft.

If Sterling/Spectra served as a consultant for the Town, another ground for denial would be relevant to an analysis of rights of access. Due to its structure, however, that provision would likely have required substantial disclosure.

Specifically, §87(2)(g) permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In a discussion of the issue of records prepared by consultants for agencies, the Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, stated that:

"Opinions and recommendations prepared by agency personnel may be exempt from disclosure under FOIL as 'predecisional materials, prepared to assist an agency decision makerin arriving at his decision' (McAulay v. Board of Educ., 61 AD 2d 1048, aff'd 48 NY 2d 659). Such material is exempt 'to protect the deliberative process of government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role would be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers (Matter of Sea Crest Const. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD 2d 546, 549).

"In connection with their deliberative process, agencies may at times require opinions and recommendations from outside consultants. It would make little sense to protect the deliberative process when such reports are prepared by agency employees yet deny this protection when reports are prepared for the same purpose by outside consultants retained by agencies. Accordingly, we hold that records may be considered 'intra-agency material' even though prepared by an outside consultant at the behest of an agency as part of the agency's deliberative process (see, Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD 2d 546, 549, supra; Matter of 124 Ferry St. Realty Corp. v. Hennessy, 82 AD 2d 981, 983)" [Xerox Corporation v. Town of Webster, 65 NY 2d 131, 132-133 (1985)].

Based upon the foregoing, records prepared by a consultant for an agency may be withheld or must be disclosed based upon the same standards as in cases in which records are prepared by the staff of an agency. It is emphasized that the Court in Xerox specified that the contents of intra-agency materials determine the extent to which they may be available or withheld, for it was held that:

"While the reports in principle may be exempt from disclosure, on this record - which contains only the barest description of them - we cannot determine whether the documents in fact fall wholly within the scope of FOIL's exemption for 'intra-agency materials,' as claimed by respondents. To the extent the reports contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law section 87[2][g][i], or other material subject to production, they should be redacted and made available to the appellant" (id. at 133).

Therefore, a record prepared by a consultant for an agency would be accessible or deniable, in whole or in part, depending on its contents.

In sum, assuming that the draft was prepared by a consultant retained by the Town, those portions of the draft consisting of statistical or factual information would, in my opinion, have been available.

If Sterling/Spectra did not serve as a consultant, it does not appear that any ground for denial would have applied. In that event, I believe that the report would have been available in its entirety.

Next, when an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

I point out that in Key v. Hynes [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search". However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when "the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made" [Thomas v. Records Access Officer, 613 NYS 2d 929, 205 AD 2d 786 (1994)].

It is also suggested that you inquire as to whether Sterling/Spectra maintains a copy of the draft. As indicated earlier, the definition of "record" includes information produced for an agency. Therefore, if that firm maintains a copy of the draft or has stored the draft electronically, I believe that the Town would be required to acquire a copy for the purpose of reviewing it and disclosing its contents to the extent required by the Freedom of Information Law.

With respect to the destruction of the draft, pertinent in my view is the "Local Government Records Law", Article 57-A of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law, which deals with the management, custody, retention and disposal of records by local governments. For purposes of those provisions, §57.17(4) of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law defines "record" to mean:

"...any book, paper, map, photograph, or other information-recording device, regardless of physical form or characteristic, that is made, produced, executed, or received by any local government or officer thereof pursuant to law or in connection with the transaction of public business. Record as used herein shall not be deemed to include library materials, extra copies of documents created only for convenience of reference, and stocks of publications."

With respect to the retention and disposal of records, §57.25 of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law states in relevant part that:

"1. It shall be the responsibility of every local officer to maintain records to adequately document the transaction of public business and the services and programs for which such officer is responsible; to retain and have custody of such records for so long as the records are needed for the conduct of the business of the office; to adequately protect such records; to cooperate with the local government's records management officer on programs for the orderly and efficient management of records including identification and management of inactive records and identification and preservation of records of enduring value; to dispose of records in accordance with legal requirements; and to pass on to his successor records needed for the continuing conduct of business of the office..."

2. No local officer shall destroy, sell or otherwise dispose of any public record without the consent of the commissioner of education. The commissioner of education shall, after consultation with other state agencies and with local government officers, determine the minimum length of time that records need to be retained. Such commissioner is authorized to develop, adopt by regulation, issue and distribute to local governments retention and disposal schedules establishing minimum retention periods..."

In view of the foregoing, records cannot be destroyed without the consent of the Commissioner of Education, and local officials cannot destroy or dispose of records until the minimum period for the retention of the records has been reached. I note that the provisions relating to the retention and disposal of records are carried out by a unit of the State Education Department, the State Archives and Records Administration. It is suggested that you contact that agency to ascertain the applicable retention period concerning the draft.

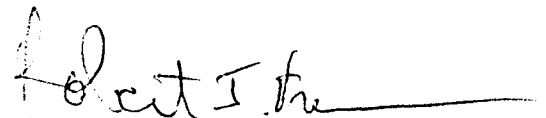

Finally, §240.65 entitled "Unlawful prevention of public access to records" and §89(8) of the Freedom of Information Law deal with the destruction of records requested pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law. The former states that:

"A person is guilty of unlawful prevention of public access to records when, with intent to prevent the public inspection of a record pursuant to article six of the public officers law, he willfully conceals or destroys any such record."

From my perspective, the preceding may be applicable in two circumstances: first, when an agency employee receives a request for a record and indicates that the agency does not maintain the record even though he or she knows that the agency does maintain the record; or second, when an agency employee destroys a record following a request for that record in order to prevent public disclosure of the record. As in the case of any violation of the Penal Law, such violation may be prosecuted by a district attorney.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Douglas Hewitt

Dear Mr. Hewitt:

I have received your letter of August 9, as well as the materials attached to it.

On June 21, you sent a request to the Office of the Oneida County District Attorney for "[a]ll information regarding...the investigation into the Village of Yorkville, Its Employees and the Yorkville Police Department including Past and Present employees' regarding [your] complaint to the Oneida County District Attorneys Office." Although you indicated that you had seen some of the records in the presence of the District Attorney, the request was denied "pursuant to Public Officers Law §87(2)(a), (b), (e) i, (e) ii, (e) iii, (e) iv, (g) i, (g) ii and (g) iii." In addition, you were informed that the request was "overly broad, vague and not readily identifiable..." Although you appealed the denial in a letter received by the Office of the District Attorney on July 7, as of the date of your letter to this office, you had received no further response.

You asked that this office investigate the matter.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee has neither the jurisdiction nor the staff to conduct an investigation. As such, the following remarks will involve the treatment of your request under the Freedom of Information Law.

First, although the Freedom of Information Law as originally enacted required that an applicant seek "identifiable" records, since 1978, §89(3) of that statute has stated that an applicant must "reasonably describe" the records sought. In considering that standard, the State's highest court has found that requested records need not be "specifically designated", that to meet the standard, the terms of a request must be adequate to enable the agency to locate the records, and that an agency must "establish that 'the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought'...before denying a FOIL request for reasons of overbreadth" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

Although it was found in the decision cited above that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth, it was also stated that:

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency']" (id. at 250).

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping systems. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

In the context of your request, I am unaware of the means by which the Office of the District Attorney maintains records falling within the scope of your request. If that agency maintains all such records in a file or group of files that are retrievable on the basis of the terms of your request, I believe that you would have met the requirement that the records be reasonably described.

Second, and perhaps most importantly, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. It is emphasized that the introductory language of §87(2) refers to the authority to withhold "records or portions thereof" that fall within the scope of the exceptions that follow. In my view, the phrase quoted in the preceding sentence evidences a recognition on the part of the Legislature that a single record or report, for example, might include portions that are available under the statute, as well as portions that might justifiably be withheld. That being so, I believe that it also imposes an obligation on an agency to review records sought, in their entirety, to determine which portions, if any, might properly be withheld or deleted prior to disclosing the remainder.

Insofar as records were disclosed to you in the past, I do not believe that the Office of the District Attorney could now choose to withhold those same records.

With respect to the remainder of the records falling within the scope of your request, the Court of Appeals expressed its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law most recently in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY 2d 267 (1996)], stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the agency contended that complaint follow up reports, also known as "DD5's", could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g). The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276). The Court then stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, directing that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

In the context of your request, the records have been withheld in their entirety. Rather than citing only §87(2)(g) as a basis for a blanket denial of access to the records at issue as in Gould, the Office of the District Attorney engaged in a blanket denial alluding to other provisions in a manner which, in my view, is equally inappropriate. I am not suggesting that the records sought must be disclosed in full. Rather, based on the direction given by the Court of Appeals in several decisions, the records must be reviewed for the purpose of identifying those portions of the records that might fall within the scope of one or more of the grounds for denial of access. As the Court stated later in the decision: "Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" (id., 277; emphasis added).

There is no question but that some of the records sought constitute inter-agency or intra-agency materials that fall within the scope of §87(2)(g). However, due to its structure, that provision frequently requires substantial disclosure. Specifically, §87(2)(g) states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different basis for denial is applicable. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. It would appear that the records sought would consist of instructions to staff that affect the public or an agency's policy. Therefore, I believe that they would be available, unless a different basis for denial could be asserted.

A second provision of potential significance is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations of judicial proceedings...
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or

iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

Only to the extent that the harmful effects of disclosure described in subparagraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e) does an agency have the authority to deny access to records. It would appear that any investigation of your complaint has been terminated. If that is so, the primary exception in §87(2)(e), the provision dealing with interference with an investigation, would likely be irrelevant.

Section 87(2)(b) permits an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure would result in "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." Frequently, names or other personally identifying details may be deleted to protect privacy, in which case the remainder of a record may be available.

Section 87(2)(a) pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." The denial merely referred to that provision; it does not cite any statute that would exempt the records of your interest from disclosure.

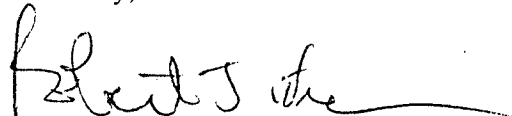

Lastly, §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law pertains to the right to appeal a denial of access to records and states in relevant part that:

It has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Nathan McBride

Ossining, NY 10562-5442

Dear Mr. McBride:

I have received your letter of August 9. You referred to denials of your requests for records by the office of a district attorney on the ground that the records had previously been furnished to your attorney. You wrote, however, that your requests made under the Freedom of Information Law to your attorney have not been answered.

In this regard, first, the records maintained by your attorney are likely not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. That statute pertains to agency records, and §86 (3) defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Based on the foregoing, the Freedom of Information Law generally applies to records maintained by governmental entities. Unless your attorney is a public defender, i.e., a county employee, it is unlikely that the attorney would be subject to the Freedom of Information Law.

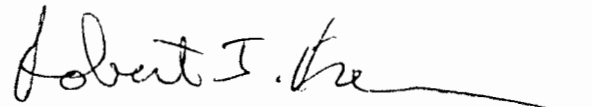

Second, as indicated to you in a letter of December 8, 1997, based on the decision rendered in Moore v. Santucci [151 AD2d 677 (1989)], if a record was made available to you or your attorney, there must be a demonstration that neither you nor your attorney possesses the record in order to successfully obtain a second copy. Specifically, the decision states that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

In view of the foregoing, it is suggested that you contact your attorney to determine whether he or she continues to possess the record. If the attorney no longer maintains the record, he or she should prepare an affidavit so stating that can be submitted to the office of the district attorney. Alternatively, if your attorney fails to answer, it is suggested that you document such failure and present it to the office of its district attorney as by means of demonstrating that you have no way of obtaining the records previously disclosed to your attorney.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Ms. Regina LaNoce

Dear Ms. LaNoce:

As you are aware, your letter of August 9 addressed to Attorney General Spitzer has been forwarded to the Committee on Open Government. The Committee, a unit of the Department of State, is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law.

According to your correspondence, you wrote to Assemblyman Jeffrion Aubry, Chairman of the Assembly Committee on Corrections, and requested certain minutes of meetings of the Committee. As of the date of your letter to the Attorney General, you had received no response and you asked whether Assemblyman Aubry is "required, by law, to provide [you] with the information...within a reasonable amount of time."

In this regard, pursuant to the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests, and requests should generally be made to that person. Although the Assembly is not an "agency" (see Freedom of Information Law, §86), it has adopted rules and procedures that include the designation of a records access officer. In my view, the Assemblyman should either have responded to your request directly or forwarded the request to the Assembly's records access officer, Ms. Sharon Walsh. With this response to you, I will forward a copy of your request to her.

For future reference, I note that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which an entity must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

Ms. Regina LaNoce

September 9, 1999

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an entity delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Harvey M. Elentuck

Dear Mr. Elentuck:

I have received your postcard in which you sought advice.

According to your correspondence, the records access officer at the Office of Labor Relations of the New York City Board of Education has granted your request to inspect records, "138,000 pages of one type of record category and 30,000 pages of a different type of record category." However, you wrote that "he is seeking to impose a time limit of 4 additional sessions at 4 hours per session." You wrote that you "want a reasonable amount of time to finish reading the material" (emphasis yours).

In this regard, in my experience relating to the Freedom of Information Law, I have not encountered a situation in which a request has been made and granted with respect to so large a volume of material. From my perspective, the primary issue involves the reasonableness of the response in conjunction with attendant facts. I am unaware of the manner in which the records are maintained, whether you have been given the authority to browse through all of the two categories of records, whether they must be physically retrieved for you on each occasion in which you seek to read them, whether they may be in use by agency staff, etc. In short, whether the limitation in terms of the number of "sessions" during which you may read the records is valid is in my view dependent on the reasonableness of the agency's response in conjunction with the kinds of factors mentioned.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, when a date that is mutually convenient to you and the agency for your inspection of the records, I believe that you may read them during the entirety of the agency's regular business hours.

Mr. Harvey M. Elentuck

September 9, 1999

By way of background, §89(1)(b)(iii) of the Freedom of Information Law requires the Committee to promulgate regulations concerning the procedural implementation of the Law (see 21 NYCRR Part 1401). In turn, §87(1) requires agencies to adopt rules and regulations consistent with the Law and the Committee's regulations.

Section 1401.2 of the regulations, provides in relevant part that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation and the head of an executive agency or governing body of other agencies shall be responsible for insuring compliance with the regulations herein, and shall designate one or more persons as records access officer by name or by specific job title and business address, who shall have the duty of coordinating agency response to public requests for access to records. The designation of one or more records access officers shall not be construed to prohibit officials who have in the past been authorized to make records or information available to the public from continuing to do so..."

Section 1401.4 of the regulations, entitled "Hours for public inspection", states that:

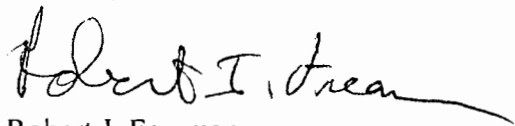

"(a) Each agency shall accept requests for public access to records and produce records during all hours they are regularly open for business."

Relevant to your inquiry and the foregoing is a decision rendered by the Appellate Division, Second Department. Among the issues was the validity of a similar limitation regarding the time permitted to inspect records established by a village pursuant to regulation. The Court held that the village was required to enable the public to inspect records during its regular business hours, stating that:

"...to the extent that Regulation 6 has been interpreted as permitting the Village Clerk to limit the hours during which public documents can be inspected to a period of time less than the business hours of the Clerk's office, it is violative of the Freedom of Information Law..."
[Murtha v. Leonard, 620 NYS 2d 101 (1994), 210 AD 2d 411].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Pedro Vega III
77-B-1532
Gowanda Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 311
Gowanda, NY 14070-0311

Dear Mr. Vega:

I have received your letter of August 8 concerning a partial denial of access to records by the Division of Parole. It appears that you have appealed to this office.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to determine appeals and cannot compel an agency to grant or deny access to records.

The provision dealing with the right to appeal a denial of access to records is found in §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Further, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), which govern the procedural aspects of the Law, state that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation or the head, chief executive or governing body of other agencies shall hear appeals or shall designate a person or body to hear appeals regarding denial of access to records under the Freedom of Information Law.

(b) Denial of access shall be in writing stating the reason therefor and advising the person denied access of his or her right to appeal to the person or body established to hear appeals, and that person or body shall be identified by name, title, business address and business telephone number. The records access officer shall not be the appeals officer" (section 1401.7).

It is noted that the state's highest court has held that a failure to inform a person denied access to records of the right to appeal enables that person to seek judicial review of a denial. Citing the Committee's regulations and the Freedom of Information Law, the Court of Appeals in Barrett v. Morgenthau held that:

"[i]nasmuch as the District Attorney failed to advise petitioner of the availability of an administrative appeal in the office (see, 21 NYCRR 1401.7[b]) and failed to demonstrate in the proceeding that the procedures for such an appeal had, in fact, even been established (see, Public Officers Law [section] 87[1][b], he cannot be heard to complain that petitioner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies" [74 NY 2d 907, 909 (1989)].

For your information and future reference, the person designated by the Division of Parole to determine appeals is Terrence X. Tracy, Counsel to the Division.

Next, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

Of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Perhaps the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

The last relevant ground for denial is §87(2)(g). The cited provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government... "

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial applies. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Records prepared by employees of an agency and communicated within the agency or to another agency would in my view fall within the scope of §87(2)(g). Those records might include opinions or recommendations, for example, that could be withheld.

Ms. Anita Rubin
Camp Paradise Road
P.O. Box 744
Fleischmanns, NY 12430

Dear Ms. Rubin:

I have received your letter of August 12, as well as a variety of materials relating to it, all of which pertain to the efforts of yourself and others to stop a proposal to site a junkyard in the Village of Fleischmanns. Part of those efforts have involved requests for records, and you have asked that I advise with respect to your "legal rights and actions [you] can pursue."

In this regard, it is emphasized at the outset that the authority of the Committee on Open Government is limited to matters involving the statutes within its advisory jurisdiction. I am not an expert with respect to election or election law related issues or civil rights matters. Consequently, the ensuing comments will be restricted to issues involving the Freedom of Information Law and the relationship between that statute and other provisions of law. I note, too, that some of my remarks may reiterate statements or opinions offered to you or others in previous correspondence.

First, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and §89(3) of that statute provides in relevant part that an agency need not create a record in response to a request for information. If, for example, there is no record identifying the person or organization that challenged your vote, there would be no obligation on the part of Village officials to prepare a record containing that information to comply with the Freedom of Information Law.

Second, when an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

I point out that in Key v. Hynes [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search". However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when "the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made" [Thomas v. Records Access Officer, 613 NYS 2d 929, 205 AD 2d 786 (1994)].

Pertinent in my view may be the "Local Government Records Law", Article 57-A of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law, which deals with the management, custody, retention and disposal of records by local governments. For purposes of those provisions, §57.17(4) of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law defines "record" to mean:

"...any book, paper, map, photograph, or other information-recording device, regardless of physical form or characteristic, that is made, produced, executed, or received by any local government or officer thereof pursuant to law or in connection with the transaction of public business. Record as used herein shall not be deemed to include library materials, extra copies of documents created only for convenience of reference, and stocks of publications."

With regard to the retention and disposal of records, §57.25 of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law states in relevant part that:

"1. It shall be the responsibility of every local officer to maintain records to adequately document the transaction of public business and the services and programs for which such officer is responsible; to retain and have custody of such records for so long as the records are needed for the conduct of the business of the office; to adequately protect such records; to cooperate with the local government's records management officer on programs for the orderly and efficient management of records including identification and management of inactive records and identification and preservation of records of enduring value; to dispose of records in accordance with legal requirements; and to pass on to his successor records needed for the continuing conduct of business of the office..."

2. No local officer shall destroy, sell or otherwise dispose of any public record without the consent of the commissioner of education. The commissioner of education shall, after consultation with other state agencies and with local government officers, determine the minimum length of time that records need to be retained. Such commissioner is authorized to develop, adopt by regulation, issue and distribute to local governments retention and disposal schedules establishing minimum retention periods..."

In view of the foregoing, records cannot be destroyed without the consent of the Commissioner of Education, and local officials cannot destroy or dispose of records until the minimum period for the retention of the records has been reached. I note that the provisions relating to the retention and disposal of records are carried out by a unit of the State Education Department, the State Archives and Records Administration.

Section 240.65 of the Penal Law entitled "Unlawful prevention of public access to records" and §89(8) of the Freedom of Information Law deal with the destruction of records requested pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law. The former states that:

"A person is guilty of unlawful prevention of public access to records when, with intent to prevent the public inspection of a record pursuant to article six of the public officers law, he willfully conceals or destroys any such record."

From my perspective, the preceding may be applicable in two circumstances: first, when an agency employee receives a request for a record and indicates that the agency does not maintain the record even though he or she knows that the agency does maintain the record; or second, when an agency employee destroys a record following a request for that record in order to prevent public disclosure of the record. As in the case of any violation of the Penal Law, such violation may be prosecuted by a district attorney.

Third, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

Further, in my opinion, if, as a matter of practice or policy, an agency acknowledges the receipt of requests and indicates in every instance that it will determine to grant or deny access to records within a particular period following the date of acknowledgement, such a practice or policy would be contrary to the thrust of the Freedom of Information Law. If a request is voluminous and a significant amount of time is needed to locate records and review them to determine rights of access, a delay beyond five business days, in view of those and perhaps the other kinds of factors mentioned earlier, might be reasonable. On the other hand, if a record or report is clearly public and can be found easily, there would appear to be no rational basis for delaying disclosure. In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

Next, since you referred to categorical denials of access to records, it is noted as a general matter that the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. It is emphasized that the introductory language of §87(2) refers to the authority to withhold "records or portions thereof" that fall within the scope of the exceptions that follow. In my view, the phrase quoted in the preceding sentence evidences a recognition on the part of the Legislature that a single record or report, for example, might include portions that are available under the statute, as well as portions that might justifiably be withheld. That being so, I believe that it also imposes an obligation on an agency to review records sought, in their entirety, to determine which portions, if any, might properly be withheld or deleted prior to disclosing the remainder.

The Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, expressed its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law in a fairly recent decision, Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY 2d 267 (1996)], stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the agency contended that complaint follow up reports, also known as "DD5's", could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g). The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276). The Court then stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, directing that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

You also wrote that the Village Clerk stated that records could not be made available due to the pendency of litigation. In this regard, as stated by the Court of Appeals in a case involving a request made under the Freedom of Information Law by a person involved in litigation against an agency: "Access to records of a government agency under the Freedom of Information Law (FOIL) (Public Officers Law, Article 6) is not affected by the fact that there is pending or potential litigation between the person making the request and the agency" [Farbman v. NYC Health and Hospitals Corporation, 62 NY 2d 75, 78 (1984)]. Similarly, in an earlier decision, the Court of Appeals determined that "the standing of one who seeks access to records under the Freedom of Information Law is as a member of the public, and is neither enhanced...nor restricted...because he is also a litigant or potential litigant" [Matter of John P. v. Whalen, 54 NY 2d 89, 99 (1980)]. The Court in Farbman, supra, discussed the distinction between the use of the Freedom of Information Law as opposed to the use of discovery in Article 31 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules (CPLR). Specifically, it was found that:

"FOIL does not require that the party requesting records make any showing of need, good faith or legitimate purpose; while its purpose may be to shed light on governmental decision-making, its ambit is not confined to records actually used in the decision-making process (Matter of Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581.) Full disclosure by public agencies is, under FOIL, a public right and in the public interest, irrespective of the status or need of the person making the request.

"CPLR article 31 proceeds under a different premise, and serves quite different concerns. While speaking also of 'full disclosure' article 31 is plainly more restrictive than FOIL. Access to records under CPLR depends on status and need. With goals of promoting both the ascertainment of truth at trial and the prompt disposition of actions (Allen v. Crowell-Collier Pub. Co., 21 NY 2d 403, 407), discovery is at the outset limited to that which is 'material and necessary in the prosecution or defense of an action'" [see Farbman, supra, at 80].

Based upon the foregoing, the pendency of litigation would not, in my opinion, affect either the rights of the public or a litigant under the Freedom of Information Law.

Lastly, as I understand the Election Law, absentee ballots and ballot envelopes are beyond the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law and may be examined only pursuant to court order. Relevant with regard to those records are §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law and §3-222(3) of the Election Law. The former pertains to records that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." The latter is such a statute, for it and provides in relevant part that:

"Except as hereinafter provided, packages of protested, void and wholly blank ballots, packages of unused ballots and all absentee and military, special federal, special presidential and emergency ballots and ballot envelopes, if any, opened or unopened, shall be preserved for two years after the election. Except as hereinafter provided, boxes contained voted paper ballots shall be preserved inviolate for four months after the election, or until one month before the next election occurring within five months after a preceding election if such boxes are needed for use at such next election and if the officer or board in charge of such voted paper ballots is required by law to furnish ballot boxes therefor. Provided, however, that such ballot boxes and such packages may be opened, and their contents and the absentee and military, special federal, special presidential and emergency ballots and ballot envelopes may be examined, upon the order of any court or justice of competent jurisdiction" (emphasis added).

Based on the foregoing, absentee ballots and ballot envelopes must be "preserved inviolate", unless a court order is issued authorizing their examination.

On the other hand, however, in a statute dealing with absentee ballot applications, Election Law, §8-402, subdivision (7) states that:

"The board shall keep a record of applications for absentee ballots as they are received, showing the names and residences of the applicants, and their party enrollment in the case of primary elections, and, as soon as practicable shall, when requested, give to the chairman of each political party or independent body in the county, and shall make available for inspection to any qualified voter upon request, a complete list of all applicants to whom absentee voters' ballots have been delivered or mailed, containing their names and places of residence as they appear on the registration record, including the election district and ward, if any..."

Similarly, §3-220(1) of the Election Law states in part that: "All registration records, certificates, lists and inventories referred to in, or required by, this chapter shall be public records..."

Based on the foregoing, it is clear in my view that the names and address of applicants for absentee ballots and voter registration lists identifying those who voted should be readily available.

Ms. Anita Rubin
September 13, 1999

I recognize that the provisions referenced above involve county boards of elections. However, I am unaware of any provision of the Election Law, Article 15, which pertains to villages elections, that would provide direction to the contrary.

With respect to the content of the applications, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law would govern in determining rights of access, and depending on their contents, portions of those documents might justifiably be withheld. For example, if the applicant includes reference to a medical condition or disability, that portion of the record could in my opinion be withheld as an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see Freedom of Information Law, §87(2)(b)]. If, however, such a record indicates that the absentee is a student, that kind of detail would not in my opinion be so intimate as to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy if disclosed.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dannemora, NY 12929

Dear Mr. Revander:

I have received your letter of September 9 in which you appealed an apparent denial of access to records maintained by courts and a legal aid organization.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. It is not authorized to determine appeals or to compel an agency to grant or deny access to records. For future reference, the provision in the Freedom of Information Law pertaining to the right to appeal, §89(4)(a), states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person thereof designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Notwithstanding the foregoing, I do not believe that the Freedom of Information Law would apply in the situations that you described. That statute is applicable to agency records. Section 86(3) of that statute defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

Mr. Thomas Revander
September 13, 1999
Page -2-

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. It is recommended that a request for court records be directed to the clerk of the court in which the proceeding was conducted, citing an applicable statute as the basis for the request.

Lastly, access to pre-sentence reports is governed by the provisions of §390.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law, and it is suggested that you review that statute.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Delano Brown
81-A-4887
Bare Hill Road
P.O. Box 10
Malone, NY 12953

Dear Mr. Brown:

I have received your letter of August 10 in which you raised issues concerning an unanswered request for records made to your facility and sought information "on how to get a community physician and dentist to proofread [your] medical and dental records and to be used at [your] trial as an expert witness..."

In this regard, the function of the Committee on Open Government involves providing advice and guidance concerning the Freedom of Information Law. Consequently, I have no information relating to the use of expert witnesses. As your remarks pertain to the Freedom of Information Law, I offer the following comments.

First, that statute provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges

that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

For your information, the person designated at the Department of Correctional Services is Anthony J. Annucci, Counsel to the Department.

Second, your request involves a variety of records relating to hearings precipitated by an incident leading to the preparation of a misbehavior report and other documentation. Some aspects of the records sought would likely be available; others could likely be withheld. As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

Of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies an informant or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or

iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

The last relevant ground for denial is §87(2)(g). The cited provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

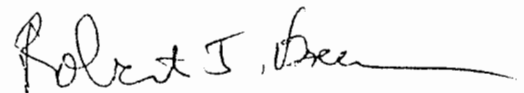

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government... "

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial applies. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Records prepared by employees of an agency and communicated within the agency or to another agency would in my view fall within the scope of §87(2)(g). Those records might include opinions or recommendations, for example, that could be withheld.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Schneider:

I have received your letter of August 13. You wrote that you received "an adequate response to a FOIL request from a NYC agency about 3 months ago, but have not responded to the invitation to submit a check or make an appointment for an inspection of the documents." You have asked whether "there [is] any statute of limitations type issue related to response time."

In this regard, there is nothing in the Freedom of Information Law that deals directly with the issue, and I know of no judicial decision that addresses it. In response to similar questions raised by agencies that have complied with law by retrieving requested records that have not been inspected by an applicant, it has been suggested that the agency inform the applicant that unless the records are inspected by a certain date, the request will be considered to have been withdrawn.

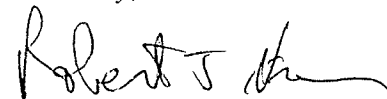

As a general matter, I believe that when a request for copies of records is served upon an agency, both the agency and the applicant bear a responsibility. The agency is responsible for compliance with the Freedom of Information Law by retrieving the records sought and disclosing them to the extent required by law. The agency is also required to produce copies of records "[u]pon payment of, or offer to pay, the fee prescribed therefor" [see Freedom of Information Law, §89(3)]. Concurrently, if the applicant requests copies, I believe that he or she bears the responsibility of paying the appropriate fee.

If an agency has prepared copies of records in good faith and the applicant fails or refuses to pay the fee, I do not believe that the agency would be required to make available those copies that have been prepared. Further, in my view, it follows that an agency should not be required to honor ensuing requests until the applicant has fulfilled his or her responsibility by tendering the fee for copies previously made.

Gouverneur Correctional Facility
Gouverneur, NY 13642

Dear Mr. Paulk:

I have received your undated letter, which reached this office on August 16. You complained that a court clerk, the office of a district attorney, a police department and your attorney have not responded to requests made under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and that §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. Even though other statutes may deal with access to court records, the procedural provisions associated with the Freedom of Information Law (i.e., those involving the designation of a records access officer or the right to appeal a denial) would not ordinarily be applicable.

It is suggested that you resubmit your request to the clerk of the court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for your request.

For the same reason, a private attorney would not be subject to the Freedom of Information Law.

On the other hand, however, an office of a district attorney or a police department would constitute an agency, and I note that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

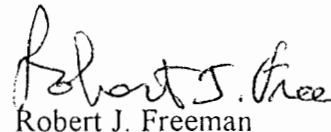

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Mr. Micheal Ross
93-A-1664
Attica Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 149
Attica, NY 14011-0149

Dear Mr. Ross:

I have received your letter of August 12. In brief, in response to a request made to the Division of State Police for a copy of a criminal complaint made against you that led to your arrest and indictment, you were informed that "[y]ou may wish to contact the courts for copies of the complaint." It is your belief that the Division maintains a copy of the record in question and that the response does not "sound right."

In this regard, if the Division of State Police maintains a copy of the record, I believe that it is obliged to grant or deny access to that record, even if another copy or the original record is available elsewhere. The Freedom of Information Law pertains to all agency records, and §86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" broadly to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, whether a record is an original or a copy, if it is kept by an agency, I believe that it would constitute a "record" that fall within the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law.

September 13, 1999

In the alternative, a request may be made to the court in which the proceeding was conducted. Should you choose to do so, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law would not apply. As indicated earlier, that statute is applicable to agency records, and that §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

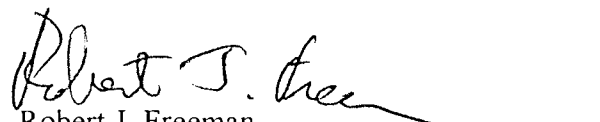

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. Even though other statutes may deal with access to court records, the procedural provisions associated with the Freedom of Information Law (i.e., those involving the designation of a records access officer or the right to appeal a denial) would not ordinarily be applicable.

It is suggested that you might submit your request to the clerk of the court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for your request.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Ronald Logan

Dear Mr. Logan:

I have received your letter of August 10 relating to a request made to the Commission of Correction for "[a]ll information in regard to directive 6910 (Criminal Prosecution of Inmates), not limited to proposal, amendments and promulgation." You were informed by the Commission's Acting Records Access Officer, Scott E. Steinhardt, that the records sought would be made available upon payment of the requisite fee. It appears that you believe that your request encompasses a greater number of records than is suggested by the fee.

Having reviewed the correspondence, in which you made your request clear, and in which, in my view, Mr. Steinhardt clearly expressed his understanding of your request, I believe that his response was fully appropriate. It is noted that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. If no records exist or were prepared in relation to directive 6910 other than those to which Mr. Steinhardt alluded in his response, the response in my opinion represented compliance with law.

I note, too, that it has been held that an agency may require payment of the fee for copying records in advance of making the copies (see Sambucci v. McGuire, Supreme Court, New York County, November 4, 1982).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Quinones:

I have received your letter of August 10. You have sought an opinion concerning whether your attorney should furnish you "all pertinent data" so that you can prepare your "own defense in an appeal."

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice relating to the Freedom of Information Law, and it is unlikely that your attorney would be required to comply with that statute.

The Freedom of Information Law pertains to agency records, and §86(3) of the Law defines the term "agency" to mean:

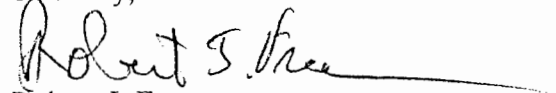

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Based on the foregoing, the Freedom of Information Law generally applies to records of entities of state and local government. Unless your attorney is a public defender who is a public employee, I do not believe that he or she would be obliged to disclose records to you under that statute. Whether he or she should do so pursuant to different laws or rules involves a matter beyond the jurisdiction or expertise of this office.

Dear Mr. Duamutef:

I have received your letter of August 9. In brief, you indicated that you were informed by the Department of Correctional Services that records that you requested would be made available by a certain date, but that it had failed to make the records available as of the date of your letter to this office.

In this regard, while you did not describe the nature of the records sought, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. Mr. Jarvis Grubbs
98-R-2322
Mid-State Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 2500
Marcy, NY 13403-2500

Dear Mr. Grubbs:

I have received your letter of August 12 and the correspondence attached to it. You have asked that I review and comment with respect to it.

In this regard, first, you referred to a section of the New York Code of Rules and Regulations (NYCRR) and contended that the response to your request for records by the New York City Police Department is inconsistent with those regulations. In this regard, the regulations to which you referred involve procedures promulgated by the Division of Criminal Justice Services in relation to requests that it receives under the Freedom of Information Law; those regulations do not apply to the New York City Police Department or any other agency.

I note that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

While an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

However, in my opinion, if, as a matter of practice or policy, an agency acknowledges the receipt of requests and indicates in every instance that it will determine to grant or deny access to records "within 120 days" or some other particular period, following the date of acknowledgement, such a practice or policy would be contrary to the thrust of the Freedom of Information Law. If a request is voluminous and a significant amount of time is needed to locate records and review them to determine rights of access, 120 days, in view of those and perhaps the other kinds of factors mentioned earlier, might be reasonable. On the other hand, if a record or report is clearly public and can be found easily, there would appear to be no rational basis for delaying disclosure for as much as 120 days. In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

Of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Perhaps the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;

- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

The last relevant ground for denial is §87(2)(g). The cited provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government... "

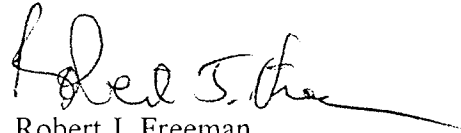

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial applies. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Records prepared by employees of an agency and communicated within the agency or to another agency would in my view fall within the scope of §87(2)(g). Those records might include opinions or recommendations, for example, that could be withheld.

Law Offices of Chadbourne, O'Neill,
Thomson, Whalen & Fitzgerald
49 Beekman Avenue
P.O. Box 701
Sleepy Hollow, NY 10591

Dear Mr. Fitzgerald:

I have received your letter of August 13, as well as the correspondence attached to it. In brief, you have sought assistance in relation to delays that you have encountered in your efforts in gaining access to records of the town of Yorktown.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

Mr. Dennis M. Fitzgerald

September 14, 1999

Page - 2 -

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

With regard to the right to appeal a denial of access to records, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), which govern the procedural aspects of the Law, state that:

(a) The governing body of a public corporation or the head, chief executive or governing body of other agencies shall hear appeals or shall designate a person or body to hear appeals regarding denial of access to records under the Freedom of Information Law.

(b) Denial of access shall be in writing stating the reason therefor and advising the person denied access of his or her right to appeal to the person or body established to hear appeals, and that person or body shall be identified by name, title, business address and business telephone number. The records access officer shall not be the appeals officer" (section 1401.7).

It is also noted that the Court of Appeals has held that a failure to inform a person denied access to records of the right to appeal enables that person to seek judicial review of a denial. Citing the Committee's regulations and the Freedom of Information Law, the Court of Appeals in Barrett v. Morgenthau held that:

"[i]nasmuch as the District Attorney failed to advise petitioner of the availability of an administrative appeal in the office (see, 21 NYCRR 1401.7[b]) and failed to demonstrate in the proceeding that the procedures for such an appeal had, in fact, even been established (see, Public Officers Law [section] 87[1][b], he cannot be heard to complain that petitioner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies" [74 NY 2d 907, 909 (1989)].

Second, having reviewed your requests, some appear to be relatively simple, such as those involving forms. In others, there may be an issue involving the extent to which the requests have met the requirement that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. It has been held by the Court of Appeals that to deny a request on the ground that it fails to reasonably describe the records, an agency must establish that "the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

The Court in Konigsberg found that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth and also stated that:

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency']" (id. at 250).

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping system. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

While I am unfamiliar with the recordkeeping systems of the Town, to extent that the records sought can be located with reasonable effort, I believe that the requests would have met the requirement of reasonably describing the records. On the other hand, if the records are not maintained in a manner that permits their retrieval except by reviewing perhaps hundreds or even thousands of records individually in an effort to locate those falling within the scope of the request, to that extent, a request would not in my opinion meet the standard of reasonably describing the records. For instance, you requested "[a]ll summons, complaints, stop work orders, and court decisions, issued from January 1, 1995 to date for any alleged violations of chapter 178 of the Town Code". Again, I am unaware of the manner in which the Town maintains its records. If the records in question are filed by means of the nature or a violation, it may not be difficult to locate them, in which case the request would reasonably describe the records. However, if the Town maintains records concerning all violations of the Town Code chronologically, by the names of violators or by address, for example, rather than by means of the section of the Code that may have been violated or similar identifier, there may be no means of locating the records of your interest without reviewing all such records. In that event, the requests, to that extent, likely would not in my opinion reasonably describe the records.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Hurd:

I have received your letter of August 16 in which you sought my views concerning "the public accessibility of exam scores prior to the establishment of the official eligible list." You indicated that you "are uncertain whether [you] must provide the score of passing candidates prior to the official establishment of the eligible list."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to all agency records, and §86(4) of the Law defines the term "record" expansively to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, once an eligible list exists, either in paper or electronic form, and irrespective of whether it is characterized as "official", I believe that it would constitute a "record" that falls within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law.

Mr. Maurice J. Hurd
September 15, 1999

Second, as you are aware, the Regulations of the Department of Civil Service, §71.3, indicate that eligible lists "may be published with the standing of persons named in them". There is no provision of law of which I am aware that focuses directly on records identifying those who passed civil service exams prior to the establishment of the official eligible list. That being so, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law would govern rights of access.

In brief, that statute is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, only one of the grounds for denial is pertinent to the issue, and I do not believe that it could be asserted to withhold a record identifying those who passed an exam.

Specifically, §87(2)(b) authorizes an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." In my opinion, disclosure of the fact that individuals have passed a civil service exam would not fall within the exception, for essentially the same information is later made available in a record characterized as "official", the eligible list. I agree with your practice of withholding records insofar as they identify persons who failed an exam; a failure would be embarrassing, it would denote ineligibility to serve in a position and would, in my view, be nobody's business. Consequently, it has consistently been advised that the identities of those who failed an exam may be withheld as an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. It has also been advised that a list of those who took an exam may be withheld, for it could later be compared with the eligible list, thereby enabling the recipient of those records to ascertain who may have failed. In contrast, I do not believe that there would be any similar harm associated with passing an exam, especially when the same information will later be part of a record that is clearly accessible to the public.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Delano McClain

Franklin Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 10
Malone, NY 12953

Dear Mr. McClain:

I have received your letter of August 13 in which you sought an opinion concerning access to a variety of records relating to your arrest.

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of all of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your request, relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning "complaint follow up reports" prepared by police officers and police officers' memo books in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate.

The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;

- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87(2)(g)(i)). Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below," 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

"However, the Police Department argues that any witness statements contained in the reports, in particular, are not 'factual' because there is no assurance of the statements' accuracy and reliability. We decline to read such a reliability requirement into the phrase 'factual data', as the dissent would have us do, and conclude that a witness statement constitutes factual data insofar as it embodies a factual account of the witness's observations. Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records, as well as others that you requested.

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub-paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

Lastly, in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available. However, in the same decision, it was also found that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

The Court in Moore also specified that an agency "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Cook:

I have received your letter of August 16. You referred to a situation in which you "merely wish to inspect/review...documents", but "the officials at Great Meadow adamantly refuse to provide [you] access to the same...[and] instead insist that [you] pay $.25 per page for the same." You have asked that this office "investigate this matter and cause the New York State Department of Correctional Services and Great Meadow Correctional Facility to allow [you] access to inspect/review the requested documents."

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee has neither the resources nor the jurisdiction to "investigate". Further, it is not empowered to enforce the Freedom of Information Law or compel an agency to comply with law. Nevertheless, I offer the following comments.

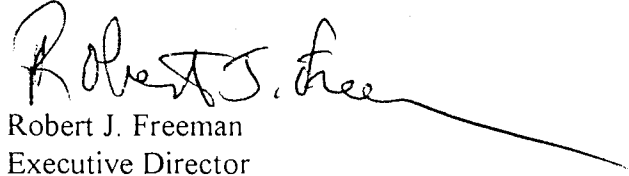

As a general matter, when a record is available in its entirety under the Freedom of Information Law, any person has the right to inspect the record at no charge. However, there may often be situations in which some aspects of a record, but not the entire record, may properly be withheld in accordance with the ground for denial appearing in §87 (2). In that event, I do not believe that an applicant would have the right to inspect the record. In order to obtain the accessible information, upon payment of the established fee, I believe that the agency would be obliged to disclose those portions of the records after having made appropriate deletions from a copy of the record.

When accessible and deniable information must, of necessity, appear on the same page, the practice preparing a redacted copy and charging the established fee, in my opinion, is justifiable.

Elmira Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 500
Elmira, NY 14902-0500

Dear Mr. Duvall:

I have received your letter of August 16. In brief, you have sought assistance concerning your unanswered request for records of the New York City Police Department that relate to your arrest and conviction.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests and appeals. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

As you are aware, the person designated by the Department to determine appeals is Susan Petito, Special Counsel.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of all of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your request, relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning "complaint follow up reports" prepared by police officers and police officers' memo books in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate.

The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...we note that one court has suggested that complaint follow-up reports are exempt from disclosure because they constitute nonfinal intra-agency material, irrespective of whether the information contained in the reports is 'factual data' (see, Matter of Scott v. Chief Medical Examiner, 179 AD2d 443, 444, supra citing Public Officers Law §87(2)(g)). However, under a plain reading of §87(2)(g), the exemption for intra-agency material does not apply as long as the material falls within any one of the provision's four enumerated exceptions. Thus, intra-agency documents that contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' are subject to FOIL disclosure, whether or not embodied in a final agency policy or determination (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosp. Corp., 62 NY2d 75, 83, supra; Matter of MacRae v. Dolce, 130 AD2d 577)...

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87(2)(g)(i)). Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

"However, the Police Department argues that any witness statements contained in the reports, in particular, are not 'factual' because there is no assurance of the statements' accuracy and reliability. We decline to read such a reliability requirement into the phrase 'factual data', as the dissent would have us do, and conclude that a witness statement constitutes factual data insofar as it embodies a factual account of the witness's observations. Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records, as well as others that you requested.

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

Lastly, in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available. However, in the same decision, it was also found that:

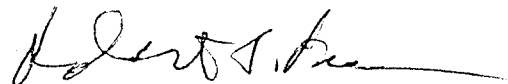

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

The Court in Moore also specified that an agency "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

Mr. Richard L. Gumo
Attorney and Counselor at Law
363A Hempstead Avenue
Malverne, NY 11565

Dear Mr. Gumo:

I have received your letter of August 20 in which you sought guidance concerning delays in the disclosure of records that you have requested from the Village of Malverne.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

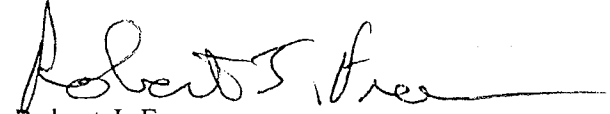

Having spoken with the Village Clerk concerning your requests, she indicated that some are repeated, that you have sought the same records more than once. Based on the decision rendered in Moore v. Santucci [151 AD2d 677 (1989)], if a record was made available to you or your representative, there must be a demonstration that neither you nor that person possesses the record in order to successfully obtain a second copy. Specifically, the decision states that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

Dear Ms. Carter:

I have received your letter of August 20. You have questioned the propriety of a charge of $35 imposed by the Oneida County Board of Elections for a copy of a disk containing the County's voter registration list.

In this regard, that issue was considered at length in Schultz v. New York State Board of Elections (Supreme Court, Albany County, September 7, 1995). The court determined the issue by viewing both the Freedom of Information Law and sections of the Election Law, stating that:

‘The language of the Freedom of Information Law (Public Officers Law, sct. 87 (1)(b)(iii), which limits charges for requested public records to ‘the actual cost of reproducing’ [emphasis added], is elucidating. ‘Actual cost’ would reasonably seem to mean mor finite, direct and less inclusive than’[indirect] cost’, which is a concept as infinite and expandable as the mind of man. ‘Reproducing’ a record certainly does not include ‘producing’ a record in the first place -i.e., compiling the information from which the record is produces. The purpose and intention of the Freedom of Information Law is to further the concept of open government. For this reason charges for public records must be kept to a minimum. In a sense the information compiled by counties under election Law 5-602 and 5-604 is a part of that concept and charges for that information must be kept to a minimum so as to maximize access thereto.’

Further, using the standard of “actual cost of reproduction”, it was stated that:

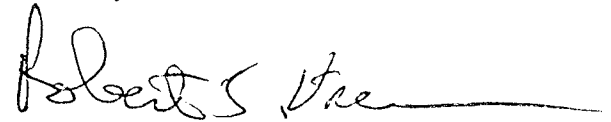

Ms. M. Pauline Carter
September 16, 1999

“Where the record is a computerized record the charge shall be limited to the cost of a diskette or other computerized tape and a reasonable amount for the salary of the employee downloading said diskette or tape during the time such diskette or tape is being downloaded.”

If reproduction of the voter list involves a simple transfer of data from one storage medium to another, i.e., from a computer to one or more disks, I would conjecture that the time and effort to do so would be minimal. If that is so, in consideration of the cost of a disk, which is generally less than a dollar, the fee of $35 would appear to be inconsistent with law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Brett:

I have received your letter of August 18. You have asked whether records of public trials maintained in the office of a county clerk "are exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law."

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

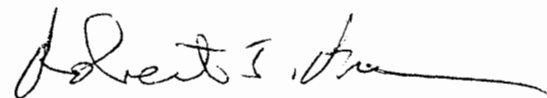

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. Even though other statutes may deal with access to court records, the procedural provisions associated with the Freedom of Information Law (i.e., those involving the designation of a records access officer or the right to appeal a denial) would not ordinarily be applicable.

FROM: Robert J. Freeman, Executive

I have received your e-mail of September 16 in which you contend that the freedom of information and privacy acts would appear to enable an employee to gain access to his or her personnel files. Nevertheless, having requested a copy from your employer, you were informed that those records are the company's property.

In this regard, first, I am unaware of the location from which you have communicated. That may be significant, because the law may differ from one jurisdiction to another.

Second, as a general matter, the freedom of information and privacy laws apply to records maintained by government agencies. Records maintained by privacy companies are indeed the property of those companies and that is ordinarily no right on the part of the employees of private companies to obtain their personnel files. This is not to suggest that those records cannot be disclosed, but rather that a private company has the discretion to disclose personnel records to employees or to withhold them.

If your employer is a government agency, since every state has enacted some sort of statute dealing with public access to government records, it is likely that you would have rights of access to at least some personnel files pertaining to you.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Randy Cahill

Dear Mr. Cahill:

I have received your letter of September 20 and the materials attached to it. You asked:

“What happens when some monopolized New York City business entity attempts to use the City’s Charter & Laws to compromise by constitutional rights while claiming to be trying to protect itself?”

In this regard, I cannot answer the question, for it involves matters unrelated to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Open Government.

I have, however, reviewed your request of September 20 to the Department of Environmental Protection. In this regard, I point out that the statute to which you referred, 5 USC §552(a), is the federal Freedom of Information Act. That act pertains to records maintained by federal agencies. The applicable statute concerning access to records of units of state and local government in New York is the New York Freedom of Information Law.

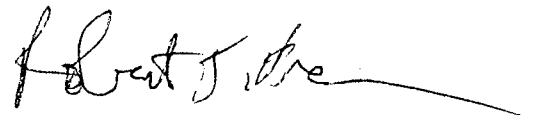

In addition, you asked for “a complete list of all records held and the specific exemption[s] being claimed for the withholding of each.” While there are cases under the federal Freedom of Information Act that require that such a list be prepared, there is no obligation to do so under the New York Freedom of Information Law. An agency is required by provide the reasons for a denial, but it is not obligated to prepare a list of the records withheld with justifications for denials of access to each.

Lastly, I note that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records and that §89(3) states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. If there are no records that indicate the reasons “for the complete replacement of city drainpipes”, an agency would not be required to prepare new records containing that information on your behalf.

Mr. Jeffrey Shankman
J.M.J. Associates, Inc.
P.O. Box 3338
New York, NY 10163

Dear Mr. Shankman:

I have received your letter of August 11 and apologize for the delay in response. You have asked whether an agency "can take over six months to respond completely to a FOIL request."

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Mr. Jeffrey Shankman

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

In short, if a request is voluminous and a significant amount of time is needed to locate records and review them to determine rights of access, a delay beyond five business days, in view of those and perhaps the other kinds of factors mentioned earlier, might be reasonable. On the other hand, if a record or report is clearly public and can be found easily, there would appear to be no rational basis for delaying disclosure.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Barone:

As you are aware, your letter of September 15 addressed to the Attorney General has been forwarded to the Committee on Open Government. The Committee, a unit of the Department of State, is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law.

In your letter to the Attorney General, you appealed a decision under the Freedom of Information Law by the Orange County Attorney. In this regard, neither the Attorney General nor the Committee on Open Government is empowered to determine such appeals. The provision in the Freedom of Information Law pertaining to the right to appeal, §89(4)(a), states in relevant part that:

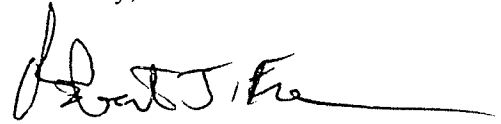

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person thereof designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

As I understand the matter, you already appealed to the Orange County Attorney, who rendered a determination on June 30. That being so, there is no additional administrative appeal. However, when an appeal is denied pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law, §89(4)(b) indicates that the person denied access may seek judicial review of the denial by initiating a proceeding under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules.

In your letter to the Attorney General, you appealed a denial of a request made under the Freedom of Information Law by a representative of the Division of Parole at your facility. In this regard, neither the Attorney General nor the Committee on Open Government is empowered to determine such appeals. The provision in the Freedom of Information Law pertaining to the right to appeal, §89(4)(a), states in relevant part that:

Ms. Jo Ann Stone

Dear Ms. Stone:

As you are aware, I have received a variety of materials from you relating to concerns "about the confidentiality and handling of [y]our daughter's file" and your efforts in obtaining information from the Fayetteville-Manlius School District pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law and the federal Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act ("FERPA", 20 USC §1232g). Based on our conversation, some of the information sought has been disclosed; other aspects of your request have not been answered.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and §89(3) of that statute states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request for information. By means of example, one of your requests involves whether "any details of [y]our daughter's situation have been discussed with representatives" of certain groups that you later identified. The Freedom of Information Law would not require the preparation of records containing the information sought. Nevertheless, the regulations promulgated by the U.S. Department of Education (34 CFR Part 99) pursuant to FERPA impose recordkeeping requirements relative to the disclosure of information that is personally identifiable to a student.

By way of background, as you are likely aware, the focal point of the FERPA is the protection of privacy of students. It provides, in general, that any "education record", a term that is broadly defined, that is personally identifiable to a particular student or students is confidential, unless the parents of students under the age of eighteen waive the right to confidentiality, or unless a student eighteen years or over similarly waives his or her right to confidentiality. The regulations promulgated under FERPA define the phrase "personally identifiable information" to include:

- "(a) The student's name;
- (b) The name of the student's parents or other family member;
- (c) The address of the student or student's family;
- (d) A personal identifier, such as the student's social security number or student number;
- (e) A list of personal characteristics that would make the student's identity easily traceable; or
- (f) Other information that would make the student's identity easily traceable" (34 CFR § 99.3).

Based upon the foregoing, references to students' names, parents' names, or other aspects of records that would make a student's identity easily traceable must in my view be withheld in order to comply with federal law unless an exception authorizes disclosure.

I note, too, that a "disclosure" is defined in §99.3 if the regulations to include not only the dissemination or reproduction of an education record, but also information contained in the record that is disclosed orally. Section 99.3 of the regulations defines the term "disclosure" to mean:

"to permit access to or the release, transfer, or other communication of personally identifiable information contained in education records to any party, by any means, including oral, written or electronic means."

As such, a disclosure includes the oral communication of information contained in education records pertaining to a student.

There are limited situations in which prior consent from parents of a minor student is not required prior to disclosure. Those that may be pertinent to the matter involve situations described in §99.31 of the regulations in which:

- "(1) The disclosure is to other school officials, including teachers, within the agency or institution whom the agency or institution has determined to have legitimate educational interests.
- (2) The disclosure is, subject to the requirements of §99.34, to officials of another school, school system, or institution of postsecondary education where the student seeks or intends to enroll."

Perhaps most important in view of the concerns that you expressed is §99.32, entitled "What recordkeeping requirements exist concerning requests and disclosures?" Subdivision (a) of that provision states that:

- "(a)(1) An educational agency or institution shall maintain a record of each request for access to and each disclosure of personally identifiable information from the education records of each student.

- (2) The agency or institution shall maintain the record with the education records of the student as long as the records are maintained.
- (3) For each request or disclosure the record must include:
 - (i) The parties who have requested or received personally identifiable information from the education records; and
 - (ii) The legitimate interests the parties had in requesting or obtaining the information.”

Subdivision (b) pertains to the redisclosure of student information in conjunction with §99.33 “only on the condition that the party to whom the information is disclosed will not disclose the information to any other party without the prior consent of the parent...” and states that:

- “(b) If an educational agency or institution discloses personally identifiable information from an education record with the understanding authorized under §99.33(b), the record of the disclosure required under this section must include:
- (1) The names of the additional parties to which the receiving party may disclose the information on behalf of the educational agency or institution; and
 - (2) The legitimate interests under §99.31 which each additional parties has in requesting or obtaining the information.”

Based on the foregoing, it is clear that the District is required to maintain a record of each request for and disclosure of personally identifiable pertaining to a student. Moreover, subdivision (c) of §99.32 specifies that the record of such disclosures must be maintained with the education records and that the parent of a student has the right to inspect such records.

Second, you indicated that the District has not responded to other aspects of your request. Specifically, you identified the following as not having been answered:

- “5.) Records indicating the dates and/or number of times Impartial Hearing Officers have been used by F.M. from 1996 to present time.
- 6.) Records indicating the number of times and/or the dates that F.M. prevailed during the Impartial Hearings between 1996 and the present time.
- 7.) Records indicating the number of times and/or number of times F.M. went before the State Review Officer from 1996 to the present time.

- 8.) Records indicating the number of times and/or dates F.M. prevailed during hearings before the State Review Officer between 1996 and the present time.
- 9.) Records indicating the dates and/or number of times any student or employee has filed any type of discrimination action against F.M. between 1995 and the present time."

As indicated earlier, FERPA prohibits the District from disclosing information personally identifiable to students without the consent of their parents. Consequently, insofar as the records sought described above would identify students if disclosed, the District may withhold those portions of the records. The records might also include names of employees, but as I understand the request, you are not interested in their names. Consequently, those aspects of the records may be deleted if disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" [see Freedom of Information Law, §87(2)(b)]. The remaining information that you have requested, essentially the dates and number of times that the District has been involved in certain proceedings or claims, would in my opinion be available. Those items would consist of factual information accessible under §87(2)(g)(i) of the Freedom of Information Law.

It is reiterated that §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that an agency is not required to create or prepare a record in response to a request. Therefore, the District would not be required to review records and prepare a total number hearings or a list of dates to accommodate you. However, I believe that it would be required to provide access to records containing the information sought, perhaps after the deletion of identifying details, in order that you could ascertain the dates or number of various proceedings or claims. For instance, if a substantial record or report has been prepared in relation to a matter, perhaps the cover sheet or similar document could be disclosed to enable you to obtain the information of you interest. With the appropriate copies, you could ascertain the numbers and dates of such proceedings. Similarly, brief portions of records indicating the outcomes of proceedings could be made available, again, following the deletion of identifying details where appropriate.

Lastly, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which an agency must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been

constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

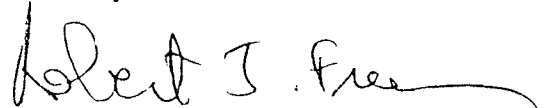

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of applicable law, copies of this response will be forwarded to District officials.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Assemblyman Prentiss:

I have received your letter of September 10 concerning the propriety of a denial of a request by Carol W. LaGrasse, President of The Property Rights Foundation of America, Inc. and yourself for the names and address of landowners referenced by an official of the Department of Environmental Conservation at a public hearing "as having requested that DEC (walk their land) to evaluate the proposed remapped wetlands."

In this regard, I have received a copy of a determination of an appeal of the denial by Ms. LaGrasse. In short, the Department determined to disclose the information sought, so long as Ms. LaGrasse indicates in writing that the names and addresses will not be used for commercial or fund-raising purposes.

As you may be aware, the Freedom of Information Law permits an agency to withhold records when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." Section 89(2)(b)(iii) states that an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy includes "sale or release of lists of names and addresses if such lists would be used for commercial or fund-raising purposes." Having spoken with Ms. LaGrasse, she informed me that she would be agreeable to asserting in writing that the materials in question would not be used for any commercial or fund-raising purpose. As such, I believe that the matter has been resolved in a manner favorable to you and Ms. LaGrasse.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Robert Board

Dear Mr. Board:

I have received your letter of September 22 in which you appealed a denial of access to records by the New York City Transit Authority. The correspondence accompanying your letter indicates that the Authority denied access to "disciplinary records" relating to three of its employees.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to determine appeals or otherwise compel an agency to grant or deny access to records. The provision dealing with the right to appeal, §89(4)(a), states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Further, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), which govern the procedural aspects of the Law, state that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation or the head, chief executive or governing body of other agencies shall hear appeals or shall designate a person or body to hear appeals regarding denial of access to records under the Freedom of Information Law.

(b) Denial of access shall be in writing stating the reason therefor and advising the person denied access of his or her right to appeal to the person or body established to hear appeals, and that person or body shall be identified by name, title, business address and business telephone number. The records access officer shall not be the appeals officer" (§1401.7).

It is also noted that the state's highest court has held that a failure to inform a person denied access to records of the right to appeal enables that person to seek judicial review of a denial. Citing the Committee's regulations and the Freedom of Information Law, the Court of Appeals in Barrett v. Morgenthau held that:

"[i]nasmuch as the District Attorney failed to advise petitioner of the availability of an administrative appeal in the office (see, 21 NYCRR 1401.7[b]) and failed to demonstrate in the proceeding that the procedures for such an appeal had, in fact, even been established (see, Public Officers Law [section] 87[1][b], he cannot be heard to complain that petitioner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies" [74 NY 2d 907, 909 (1989)].

Rather than initiating litigation, it is suggested that you contact Gail Rogers, the Authority's freedom of information officer, to ascertain the identity of the person designated by the Authority to determine appeals.

With respect to the substance of the matter, insofar as records indicate a finding misconduct or the nature of a penalty imposed, I believe that they must be made available.

By way of background, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, two of the grounds for denial are relevant in consideration of rights of access to the records in question.

Relevant to an analysis is §87(2)(b), which permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". While the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public officers employees. It is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public officers and employees are required to be more accountable than others. With regard to records pertaining to public officers and employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a their official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup.

Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, supra; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977].

The other ground for denial of significance, §87(2)(g), states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. Insofar as a request involves final agency determinations, I believe that those determinations must be disclosed, again, unless a different ground for denial could be asserted.

In terms of the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, it is emphasized that in situations in which allegations or charges have resulted in the issuance of a written reprimand, disciplinary action, or findings that public employees have engaged in misconduct, records reflective of those kinds of determinations have been found to be available, including the names of those who are the subjects of disciplinary action [see Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); also Farrell, Geneva Printing, Scaccia and Sinicropi, supra]. Three of the decisions cited above, Powhida, Farrell and Scaccia involved police officers, and in each case, the names of the officers were determined to be public.

Other decisions have dealt with settlements reached following the initiation of disciplinary proceedings. In Geneva Printing, supra, a public employee charged with misconduct and in the process of an arbitration hearing engaged in a settlement agreement with a municipality. One aspect of the settlement was an agreement to the effect that its terms would remain confidential. Notwithstanding the agreement of confidentiality, which apparently was based on an assertion that "the public interest is benefited by maintaining harmonious relationships between government and its employees", the court found that no ground for denial could justifiably be cited to withhold the agreement. On the contrary, it was determined that:

"the citizen's right to know that public servants are held accountable when they abuse the public trust outweighs any advantage that would accrue to municipalities were they able to negotiate disciplinary matters with its employee with the power to suppress the terms of any settlement".

It was also found that the record indicating the terms of the settlement constituted a final agency determination available under the Law. The decision states that:

"It is the terms of the settlement, not just a notation that a settlement resulted, which comprise the final determination of the matter. The public is entitled to know what penalty, if any, the employee suffered...The instant records are the decision or final determination of the village, albeit arrived at by settlement..."

In another more recent decision involving a settlement agreement between a school district and a teacher, it was held in Anonymous v. Board of Education [616 NYS 2d 867 (1994)] that:

"...it is disingenuous for petitioner to argue that public disclosure is permissible...only where an employee is found guilty of a specific charge. The settlement agreement at issue in the instant case contains the petitioner's express admission of guilt to a number of charges and specifications. This court does not perceive the distinction between a finding of guilt after a hearing and an admission of guilt insofar as protection from disclosure is concerned" (id., 870).

As suggested by the Court in Anonymous, there is no distinction in substance between a finding of guilt after a hearing and an admission of guilt as a means of avoiding such a proceeding. The same decision also referred to contentions involving privacy as follows:

"Petitioner contends that disclosure of the terms of the settlement at issue in this case would constitute an unwarranted invasion of his privacy prohibited by Public Officers Law § 87(2)(b). Public Officers Law § 89(2)(b) defines an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as, in pertinent part, '(i) disclosure of employment, medical or credit histories or personal references of applicants for employment.' Petitioner argues that the agreement itself provides that it shall become part of his personnel file and that material in his personnel file is exempt from disclosure..." (id.).

In response to those contentions, the decision stated that:

"This court rejects that conclusion as establishing an exemption from disclosure not created by statute (Public Officers Law § 87[2][a]), and not within the contemplation of the 'employment, medical or credit history' language found under the definition of 'unwarranted invasion of personal privacy' at Public Officers Law § 89(2)(b)(i). In fact, the information sought in the instant case, i.e., the terms of settlement of charges of misconduct lodged against a teacher by the Board of Education, is not information in which petitioner has any reasonable expectation of privacy where the agreement contains the teacher's admission to much of the misconduct charged. The agreement does not contain details of the petitioner's personal history-but it does contain the details of admitted misconduct toward students, as well as the agreed penalty. The information is clearly of significant interest to the public, insofar as it is a final determination and disposition of matters within the work of the Board of Education and reveals the process of and basis for government decision-making. This is not a case where petitioner is to be protected from possible harm to his professional reputation from unfounded accusations (Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Melino, 77 N.Y.2d 1, 563 N.Y.S.2d 380, 564 N.E.2d 1046), for this court regards the petitioner's admission to the conduct described in the agreement as the equivalent of founded accusations. As such, the agreement is tantamount to a final agency determination not falling within the privacy exemption of FOIL 'since it was not a disclosure of employment history.'" (id., 871).

Most recently, in LaRocca v. Board of Education of Jericho Union Free School District [632 NYS 2d 576 (1995)], the Appellate Division held that a settlement agreement was available insofar as it included admissions of misconduct. In that case, charges were initiated under §3020-a of the Education Law, but were later "disposed of by negotiation and settled by an Agreement" (id., 577) and withdrawn. The court rejected claims that the record could be characterized as an employment history that could be withheld as an unwarranted invasion of privacy, and found that a confidentiality agreement was invalid. Specifically, it was stated that:

"Having examined the settlement agreement, we find that the entire document does not constitute an 'employment history' as defined by FOIL (see, Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, supra) and it is therefore presumptively available for public inspection (see, Public Officers Law § 87[2]; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health and Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d 75, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437). Moreover, as a matter of public policy, the Board of Education cannot bargain away the public's right of access to public records (see, Board of Educ., Great Neck Union Free School Dist. v. Areman, 41 N.Y.2d 527, 394 N.Y.S.2d 143, 362 N.E.2d 943)" (id., 578, 579).

In contrast, when allegations or charges of misconduct have not yet been determined or did not result in disciplinary action or a finding of misconduct, the records relating to such allegations may, in my view, be withheld, for disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Herald Company v. School District of City of Syracuse, 430 NYS 2d 460 (1980)]. Similarly, to the extent that charges are dismissed or allegations are found to be without merit, I believe that they may be withheld. As stated earlier, the records in this instance do not involve mere allegations. The facts of the matter are undisputed, admissions have been made, and disciplinary action has been or will be taken.

It is emphasized the courts have consistently interpreted the Freedom of Information Law in a manner that fosters maximum access. As stated by the Court of Appeals more than a decade ago:

"To be sure, the balance is presumptively struck in favor of disclosure, but in eight specific, narrowly constructed instances where the governmental agency convincingly demonstrates its need, disclosure will not be ordered (Public Officers Law, section 87, subd 2). Thus, the agency does not have carte blanche to withhold any information it pleases. Rather, it is required to articulate particularized and specific justification and, if necessary, submit the requested materials to the court for in camera inspection, to exempt its records from disclosure (see Church of Scientology of N.Y. v. State of New York, 46 NY 2d 906, 908). Only where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld" [Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 NY 2d 567, 571 (1979)].

In a decision that was cited earlier, the Court of Appeals found that:

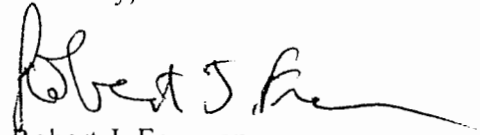

"The Freedom of Information Law expresses this State's strong commitment to open government and public accountability and imposes a broad standard of disclosure upon the State and its agencies (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v New York City Health and Hosps. Corp., 62 NY 2d 75, 79). The statute, enacted in furtherance of the public's vested and inherent 'right to know', affords all citizens the means to obtain information concerning the day-to-day functioning of State and local government thus providing the electorate with sufficient information 'to make intelligent, informed choices with respect to both the direction and scope of governmental activities' and with an effective tool for exposing waste, negligence and abuse on the part of government officers" (Capital Newspapers v. Burns, supra, 565-566).

For the reasons described above, it is my opinion that records indicating the names of the public employees and the nature of disciplinary action or sanction imposed against them must be disclosed.

Dear Mr. Lee:

I have received your letter of August 24. You have asked whether you "have the right to know how much interest was charged on an Urban Renewal Loan."

In this regard, by way of background, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87 (2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Relevant under the circumstances is §87 (2)(b), which enables an agency to withhold records or portions thereof the disclosure of which constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

While I believe that the Freedom of Information Law is intended to ensure that government is accountable, the privacy provisions of that statute enable government to prevent disclosures concerning the personal or intimate details of individuals' lives. As such, with respect to grant, loan or other programs in which income level is a factor in determining participation, often the question involves the extent to which disclosure would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

From my perspective, a disclosure that permits the public determine the general income level of a participant in such a program based upon income eligibility would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, for such a disclosure would indicate that a particular individual has an income or economic means below a certain level. In some circumstances, individuals might be embarrassed by such disclosure. Further, the New York State Tax Law contains provisions that require the confidentiality of records reflective of the particulars of a person's income or payment of taxes (see e.g., section 697, Tax Law). As such, it would appear that the Legislature felt that disclosure of records concerning personal income would constitute an improper or "unwarranted" invasion of person privacy, and, therefore, that the information sought could be withheld from the public under the Freedom of Information Law.

September 27, 1999

Consequently, if your interest involves knowing the interest charged to a particular individual, such as a homeowner, I do not believe that you would have the right to know the identity of the homeowner if his or her participation is based on having an income below a certain level.

On the other hand, if a loan was given to a business or to a person acting in a business capacity, there would be nothing "personal" about the interest charged. In that circumstance, I believe that you would have the right to review records containing the information of your interest.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Good Morning Ms. Quinn:

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to records of governmental entities; usually it does not apply to not-for-profit organizations, even though they may receive government funding. I say "usually" because there have been circumstances in which not-for-profit corporations have been formed by government or are subject to substantial control and, therefore, have been found by the courts to be subject to the requirements of the Freedom of Information and Open Meetings Laws. We should discuss the facts involved here to ascertain the extent of any governmental connection.

Also, in some instances, as a condition for the receipt of government money, there may be reporting requirements under which one or more government agencies receive records from the no-for-profit recipients of funding. When those records are produced for or come into the possession of a government agency subject to the Freedom of Information Law, they are subject to rights of access conferred by that statute.

I will be in the office today, Friday, until about 12:30 and all day Monday if you would like to discuss the matter further.

Dear Mr. Ross:

I have received your letter of September 26 in which you requested your pre-sentence report from this office.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning rights of access to government records, primarily under the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not have possession or control of records generally. Further, in this instance, a different statute governs access.

Although the Freedom of Information Law provides broad rights of access to records, the first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), states that an agency may withhold records or portions thereof that "...are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute..." Relevant under the circumstances is §390.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law, which, in my opinion represents the exclusive procedure concerning access to pre-sentence reports.

Section 390.50(1) of the Criminal Procedure Law states that:

"Any pre-sentence report or memorandum submitted to the court pursuant to this article and any medical, psychiatric or social agency report or other information gathered for the court by a probation department, or submitted directly to the court, in connection with the question of sentence is confidential and may not be made available to any person or public or private agency except where specifically required or permitted by statute or upon specific authorization of the court. For purposes of this section, any report, memorandum or other information forwarded to a probation department within this state is governed by the same rules of confidentiality. Any person, public or private agency receiving such material must retain it under the same conditions of confidentiality as apply to the probation department that made it available."

In addition, subdivision (2) of §390.50 states in part that: "The pre-sentence report shall be made available by the court for examination and copying in connection with any appeal in the case..."

In view of the foregoing, I believe that a pre-sentence report may be made available only upon the order of a court, and only under the circumstances described in §390.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law. It is suggested that you review that statute.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

private agency receiving such material must retain it under the same conditions of confidentiality as apply to the probation department that made it available."

In addition, subdivision (2) of §390.50 states in part that: "The pre-sentence report shall be made available by the court for examination and copying in connection with any appeal in the case..."

In view of the foregoing, I believe that a pre-sentence report may be made available only upon the order of a court, and only under the circumstances described in §390.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law. It is suggested that you review that statute.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Palmer:

I have received your undated letter, which reached this office on September 29. You have appealed to this office following a failure by your facility to respond to a request made under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to determine appeals or compel an agency to grant or deny access to records. When a request is denied either in writing or by means of a failure to respond, an appeal may be made pursuant to §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states in relevant part that:

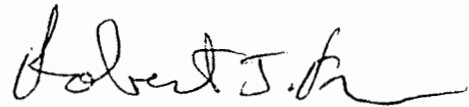

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person thereof designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought.

For your information, the person designated by the Department of Correctional Services to determine appeals is Anthony J. Annucci, Counsel to the Department.

Mr. Jerry Brixner

Dear Mr. Brixner:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of August 18 and the materials attached to it. Please accept my apologies for the delay in response.

You referred initially to what appears to be an excerpt from the Town of Chili code that deals with public access to records and asked whether the Code provisions "may restrict or expand the Provisions of the Freedom of Information Law."

Having reviewed the excerpt from the code, it appears to be essentially a verbatim adoption of the regulations and model regulations issued by the Committee on Open Government. As such, I do not believe that it "restricts" or "expands" the Freedom of Information Law; rather it is fully consistent with that statute and the regulations promulgated thereunder.

One of the attachments to your letter is a request made under the Freedom of Information Law for certain communications between Town officials and the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation and Monroe County. The provision that would appear to govern rights of access to the records in question is §87 (2)(g), of the Freedom of Information Law, which enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or

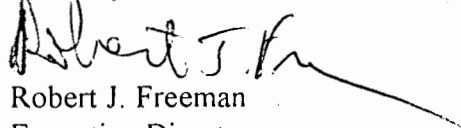

Mr. Jerry Brixner

iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Reale:

I have received your letter of August 25 and the materials attached to it. The focus of your comments involves your inability to pay for copies of records, and a refusal by the State Commission of Correction to waive the fee.

In this regard, for purposes of clarification, as you may be aware, the federal Freedom of Information Act (5 USC §552) includes provisions concerning the waiver of fees in certain circumstances. That statute, however, applies only to records maintained by federal agencies. The applicable statute in the context of your requests is the New York Freedom of Information Law, which is silent with respect to fee waivers. In view of the absence of any provision pertaining to the waiver of fees, it has consistently been advised that there is no obligation on the part of an agency to waive its fees for copies, even if the applicant is an indigent inmate. Further, since all members of the public have the same rights under the Freedom of Information Law, there is no basis for distinguishing between an inmate in a state prison and a person incarcerated in a county jail.

I note that the decision cited in the correspondence, Whitehead v. Morgenthau [552 NYS2d 518 (1990)] dealt with the issue exhaustively and reached the conclusion suggested in the preceding paragraph.

Dear Elena:

I have received your letter concerning the ability to obtain court records under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and that §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. Even though other statutes may deal with access to court records, the procedural provisions associated with the Freedom of Information Law (i.e., those involving the designation of a records access officer or the right to appeal a denial) would not ordinarily be applicable.

Dear Mr. Rybaltowski:

I have received your letter of August 30 in which you asked that I review the "Application for Public Access to Records" used by the North Colonie Central School District.

While I do not believe that the form is inconsistent with the Freedom of Information Law or the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), I offer the following comments.

First, although many agencies have developed forms, it has consistently been advised that a failure by an applicant for records to use an agency's prescribed form cannot serve as a valid basis for either delaying response to a request or denying a request. In short, it has been advised that any request made in writing that reasonably describes the records sought as required by §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law should suffice.

Second, although I am not suggesting that that aspect of the form be altered, I point out that there several grounds for denial appearing in §87(2) of the Freedom of Information Law; allusion is made in the form only to the first, §87(2)(a), which pertains to the ability to withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." The box marked "other", however, appears to be adequate to indicate reasons for denial distinct from those identified on the form.

Lastly, the statement at the bottom of the form pertains to the right to appeal a denial of access to records. Here I point out that §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law states that a person denied access has thirty days to appeal. It is suggested that reference to that limitation be included in the statement, i.e., "You have a right to appeal a denial of this application within thirty days to...."

I hope that I have been of assistance. Should any further questions arise, please feel free to contact me.

Dear Mr. Muszak:

I have received your letter of August 28 in which you complained that you received a tape recording of a fair hearing from the Office of Temporary and Disability Assistance rather than a transcript as you had requested. You have contended that Commissioner Wing "is in violation of the Freedom of Information Law" and asked that I "instruct him to provide [you] with the requested information or explanation why it cannot be provided."

In this regard, first, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to compel or "instruct" a person or agency to follow a certain course of action.

Second, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and §89(3) of that statute states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. If, for instance, no transcript of the proceeding was prepared, there would be no obligation on the part of the agency to create such a record on your behalf. If a tape recording is the only verbatim account of the proceeding, it would have been the only record maintained by the agency that would have served to enable you to obtain the information sought. On the other hand, if a transcript was prepared, I believe that the agency would be required to make a photocopy upon payment of the requisite fee in an effort to satisfy your request.

Ms. Shirley J. Motyl

Dear Ms. Motyl:

I have received your letter of August 24. You wrote that you are an employee of a state agency and that an evaluation of your performance is "filled with false statements". You indicated that you do not want the documentation disclosed when it is sought pursuant to a subpoena, and you have requested assistance in the matter.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, because the evaluation pertains to you, you are a "data subject" for purposes of the Personal Privacy Protection Law. Under §95(2) of that statute, if you believe that the content of a record about yourself is "not accurate, relevant, timely or complete", you may attempt to correct or amend the record. If your initial request to do so is rejected, you have the right to appeal under subdivision (3) of §95. If the appeal is denied, you have the right to prepare a statement of disagreement, which would become part of the record.

Second, some aspects of your evaluation would be available to any person under the Freedom of Information Law. I note that there is nothing in the Freedom of Information Law that deals specifically with personnel records or personnel files. The nature and content of so-called personnel files may differ from one agency to another and from one employee to another. Neither the characterization of documents as personnel records nor their placement in personnel files would necessarily render those documents confidential or deniable under the Freedom of Information Law (see Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980). On the contrary, the contents of those documents are the factors used in determining the extent to which they are available or deniable under the Freedom of Information Law.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. It is likely that two of the grounds for denial are relevant to an analysis of rights of access that may be conferred by the Freedom of Information Law to the records in question.

Section 87(2)(g) enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Also significant is §87(2)(b), which permits an agency to withhold records when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." Although the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public employees. It is clear based upon judicial decisions that public employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public employees are required to be more accountable than others. Further, with regard to records pertaining to public employees, the courts have found in a variety of contexts that records that are relevant to the performance of a public employee's official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980); Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977].

It is likely that performance evaluations are accessible and deniable in part under the Freedom of Information Law. While the contents of evaluations may differ, I believe that a typical evaluation contains three components.

One component involves a description of the duties to be performed by a person holding a particular position, or perhaps a series of criteria reflective of the duties or goals to be achieved by a person holding that position. Insofar as evaluations contain information analogous to that described, I believe that those portions would be available. In terms of privacy, a duties description or statement of goals would clearly be relevant to the performance of the official duties of the incumbent of the position. Further, that kind of information generally relates to the position and would pertain to any person who holds that position. As such, I believe that disclosure would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. In terms of §87(2)(g), a duties description or statement of goals would be reflective of the policy of an agency regarding the performance standards inherent in a position and, therefore, in my view, would be available under §87(2)(g)(iii). It might also be considered factual information available under §87(2)(g)(i).

The second component involves the reviewer's subjective analysis or opinion of how well or poorly the standards or duties have been carried out or the goals have been achieved. In my view, that aspect of an evaluation could be withheld, both as an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy and under §87(2)(g), on the ground that it constitutes an opinion concerning performance.

A third possible component is often a final rating, i.e., "good", "excellent", "average", etc. Any such final rating would in my opinion be available, assuming that any appeals have been exhausted, for it would constitute a final agency determination available under §87(2)(g)(iii), particularly if a monetary award is based upon a rating. Moreover, a final rating concerning a public employee's performance is relevant to that person's official duties and therefore would not in my view result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy if disclosed.

In sum, the fact that documents are characterized as personnel records does not render them confidential; for purposes of determining rights of access under the Freedom of Information Law, the contents of the records and the effects of disclosure are, in my view, the factors pertinent in relation to an agency's duty to grant or its ability to deny access.

Lastly, under §96 of the Personal Privacy Protection Law, a state agency cannot disclose personal information except under a series of exceptions that authorize disclosure. One of the exceptions, §96(1)(c), involves records available under the Freedom of Information Law, i.e., those records which if disclosed would not constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Therefore, to the extent that the Freedom of Information Law grants access to the records at issue, the Personal Privacy Protection Law would have no impact.

If it is determined that §96 is to be used in determining the extent of an agency's disclosure, an additional issue arises, for §96(1)(k) authorizes an agency to disclose personal information "to any person pursuant to a court ordered subpoena or other compulsory legal process." If a subpoena served on the agency is considered to be compulsory legal process, the agency may have no choice but to disclose.

Ms. Shirley J. Motyl

As suggested earlier, you might want to attempt to correct or amend the portions of the evaluation that you consider to be inaccurate.

Mr. Vincent J. Fabbo

Dear Mr. Fabbo:

I have received your letter of August 25 in which you sought assistance in obtaining the name of the person who submitted a complaint to the Town of Smithtown alleging that you were maintaining an illegal apartment in your dwelling.

It is noted that you referred to 5 USC section 552 and the Privacy Act as the basis of your request. Those statutes are, respectively, the federal Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts, and they pertain only to records maintained by federal agencies; they do not apply to the Town of Smithtown. The applicable statute in my view is the New York Freedom of Information Law, which pertains to records maintained by entities of state and local government in New York.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

When an allegation or complaint is made to an agency, §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law is relevant. That provision permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

With respect to such records, it has generally been advised that those portions of the complaint which identify complainants may be deleted on the ground that disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. I point out that §89(2)(b) states that an "agency may delete identifying details when it makes records available." Further, the same provision contains five examples of unwarranted invasions of personal privacy, the last two of which include:

"iv. disclosure of information of a personal nature when disclosure would result in economic or personal hardship to the subject party and

October 13, 1999

such information is not relevant to the work of the agency requesting or maintaining it; or

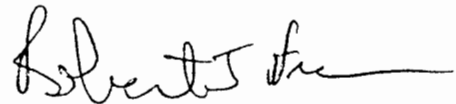

v. disclosure of information of a personal nature reported in confidence to an agency and not relevant to the ordinary work of such agency."

In my view, what is relevant to the work of the agency is the substance of the complaint, i.e., whether or not the complaint has merit. The identity of a member of the person who made the complaint is often irrelevant to the work of the agency, and in such circumstances, I believe that identifying details may be deleted.

In short, I believe that the Town has the authority to withhold those portions of records which if disclosed would identify the person who made the complaint.

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lisa Haarlander
The Buffalo News
One News Plaza
P.O. Box 100
Buffalo, NY 14240

Dear Ms. Haarlander:

I have received your letter of August 26 concerning your efforts in obtaining permits and variances approved by the Town of Orchard Park Zoning Board of Appeals.

In this regard, first, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, permits and variances are clearly available, for none of the grounds for denial would be pertinent or applicable. Names and addresses of those to whom permits or variances have been granted by the Board would have been disclosed at one or more open meetings during which any person present would have had the ability to acquire those items of information. Further, building permits, even those issued without an action taken by a zoning board or other public body, would clearly be public. In short, licenses, permits and similar records that indicate that person or firm is authorized to engage in certain activity have long been accessible to the public

Second, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

Ms. Lisa Haarlander

Further, in my opinion, if, as a matter of practice or policy, an agency acknowledges the receipt of requests and indicates in every instance that it will determine to grant or deny access to records within a particular period following the date of acknowledgement, such a practice or policy would be contrary to the thrust of the Freedom of Information Law. If a request is voluminous and a significant amount of time is needed to locate records and review them to determine rights of access, a delay beyond five business days, in view of those and perhaps the other kinds of factors mentioned earlier, might be reasonable. On the other hand, if a record or report is clearly public and can be found easily, there would appear to be no rational basis for delaying disclosure. In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

As I understand the circumstances and the nature of the records sought, there would be no basis for a delay in disclosure.

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of the Freedom of Information Law, copies of this response will be sent to Town officials.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Richard Burke

Dear Mr. Burke:

I have received your letter of August 20 in which you sought assistance in obtaining records from attorneys, hospitals or doctors, insurance companies, private agencies and courts and "law enforcement."

In this regard, the statute within the advisory jurisdiction of this office, the Freedom of Information Law, is applicable to agency records, and §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records.

Units of state and local government, including law enforcement agencies, such as police departments and offices of district attorneys, are required to comply with the Freedom of Information

Law. Private entities, such as insurance companies, as well as private attorneys, hospitals and doctors, are not subject to that statute.

Lastly, while private hospitals and doctors are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law, under §18 of the Public Health Law, a patient may generally obtain medical or hospital records pertaining to himself.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Stephen Perelson, Esq.
Shaw & Perelson, LLP
2-4 Austin Court
Poughkeepsie, NY 12603

Dear Mr. Perelson:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of August 25. Please accept my apologies for the delay in response. In your capacity as counsel to the Dobbs Ferry Union Free School District and its Board of Education, you have sought my views concerning the District's obligation to release a certain report.

In brief, following incidents in which crimes or misconduct were alleged on the part of District employees, the Board hired "special legal counsel" to investigate and report her findings. You added that "[t]he special counsel understood that her report could be subject to the attorney-client privilege and attorney work product privilege." One claim had been initiated against the District before the special counsel was retained; others have been filed since. The Board received the Special Counsel's report in June, and it "has been safeguarded with only Board members, Superintendent of Schools, and the District's counsel authorized to read it." However, you added that the Board "has released to the public each and every recommendation set forth by Special Counsel; and that many of the recommendations have been or in are in the process of being adopted."

You indicated that "[t]he report itself is the special counsel's narrative apparently drawing upon information culled from interviews of District employees, Board of Education members, parents and some students."

In considering the extent to which the report should be disclosed, you asked that I focus on "the distinctions and tests associated with the difference between 'factual data' as contrasted with material that would not qualify as factual data in a report such as described above."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

Mr. Stephen Perelson, Esq.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Had the recommendations in the report not been released, I believe that the report could likely have been withheld in its entirety. The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute," and I believe that it would have properly been asserted in that circumstance.

Section 3101 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules (CPLR) pertains to disclosure in a context related to litigation, and subdivision (a) reflects the general principle that "[t]here shall be full disclosure of all matter material and necessary in the prosecution or defense of an action..." The Advisory Committee Notes pertaining to §3101 state that the intent is "to facilitate disclosure before trial of the facts bearing on a case while limiting the possibilities of abuse." The prevention of "abuse" is considered in the remaining provisions of §3101, which describe narrow limitations on disclosure. One of those limitations, §3101(c), states that "[t]he work product of an attorney shall not be obtainable." Another pertains to material prepared for litigation, and §3101(d)(2) states in relevant part that:

"materials otherwise discoverable under subdivision (a) of this section and prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial by or for another party, or by or for the other party's representative (including an attorney, consultant, surety, indemnitor, insurer or agent), may be obtained only upon a showing that the party seeking discovery has substantial need of the materials in the preparation of the case and is unable without undue hardship to obtain the substantial equivalent of the materials by other means. In ordering discovery of the materials when the required showing has been made, the court shall protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation."

Both of the provisions cited above are intended to shield from an adversary records that would result in a strategic advantage or disadvantage, as the case may be. Reliance on both in the context of a request made under the Freedom of Information Law is in my view dependent upon a finding that the records have not been disclosed, particularly to an adversary. In a decision in which it was determined that records could justifiably be withheld as attorney work product, the "disputed documents" were "clearly work product documents which contain the opinions, reflections and thought process of partners and associates" of a law firm "which have not been communicated or shown to individuals outside of that law firm" [Estate of Johnson, 538 NYS 2d 173 (1989)].

Also pertinent is §4503 of the CPLR, which codifies the attorney-client privilege. In a decision in which the relationship between the attorney-privilege and the ability to withhold the work product of an attorney was discussed, and it was found that:

"The attorney-client privilege requires some showing that the subject information was disclosed in a confidential communication to an attorney for the purpose of obtaining legal advice (Matter of Priest v. Hennessy, 51 N.Y.2d 62, 68-69, 431 N.Y.S.2d 511, 409 N.E.2d 983). The work-product privilege requires an attorney affidavit showing that the information was generated by an attorney for the purpose of litigation (see, Warren v. New York City Tr. Auth., 34 A.D.2d 749, 310 N.Y.S.2d 277). The burden of satisfying each element of the privilege falls on the party asserting it (Priest v. Hennessy, supra, 51 N.Y.2d at 69, 431 N.Y.S. 2d 511, 409 N.E.2d 983), and conclusory assertions will not suffice (Witt v. Triangle Steel Prods. Corp., 103 A.D.2d 742, 477 N.Y.S.2d 210)" [Coastal Oil New York, Inc. v. Peck, [184 AD 2d 241 (1992)]].

In a discussion of the parameters of the attorney-client relationship and the conditions precedent to its initiation, it has been held that:

"In general, 'the privilege applies only if (1) the asserted holder of the privilege is or sought to become a client; (2) the person to whom the communication was made (a) is a member of the bar of a court, or his subordinate and (b) in connection with this communication relates to a fact of which the attorney was informed (a) by his client (b) without the presence of strangers (c) for the purpose of securing primarily either (i) an opinion on law or (ii) legal services (iii) assistance in some legal proceeding, and not (d) for the purpose of committing a crime or tort; and (4) the privilege has been (a) claimed and (b) not waived by the client'" [People v. Belge, 59 AD 2d 307, 399 NYS 2d 539, 540 (1977)].

Once information contained in an attorney's work product, material prepared for litigation or which is subject to the attorney-client privilege is transmitted to an adversary or otherwise disclosed to parties other than the client, I believe that the capacity to claim exemptions from disclosure under §3101(c) or (d) or §4503 of the CPLR or, therefore, §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, ends.

In short, insofar as the contents of the report of the special counsel have been disclosed, I do not believe that there would be any basis for a denial of access. The remainder of the report, however, would appear to remain privileged and could be withheld as the work product of an attorney or based on an assertion of the attorney-client privilege.

If the ability to withhold the remainder of the report could not properly be asserted based on the privileges described above, other grounds for denial would be pertinent to an analysis of the extent to which the report would be accessible.

For instance, the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act ("FERPA"; 20 USC §1232g) applies to all educational agencies or institutions that participate in funding, loan or grant programs administered by the United States Department of Education. As such, FERPA includes within its scope virtually all public educational institutions and many private educational institutions. The focal point of FERPA is the protection of privacy of students. It provides, in general, that any "education record," a term that is broadly defined, that is personally identifiable to a particular student or students is confidential, unless the parents of students under the age of eighteen waive their right to confidentiality, or unless a student eighteen years or over similarly waives his or her right to confidentiality. The federal regulations promulgated under FERPA define the phrase "personally identifiable information" to include:

- "(a) The student's name;
- (b) The name of the student's parents or other family member;
- (c) The address of the student or student's family;
- (d) A personal identifier, such as the student's social security number or student number;
- (e) A list of personal characteristics that would make the student's identity easily traceable; or
- (f) Other information that would make the student's identity easily traceable" (34 CFR §99.3).

Based upon the foregoing, references to students' names or other aspects of records that would make a student's identity easily traceable must in my view be withheld from the public in order to comply with federal law.

In view of the facts of the matter, names of District employees and perhaps other information identifiable to them or those who were the subjects of allegations might be withheld on the ground that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" [see Freedom of Information Law, § 87(2)(b)]. The extent to which that exception might properly be asserted would be dependent on the nature and content of those portions of the report involving interviews or other information acquired from those persons.

The remaining ground for denial of significance, §87(2)(g), enables an agency to withhold records that

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

One of the contentions offered by the New York City Police Department in a decision rendered by the Court of Appeals was that certain reports could be withheld because they are not final and because they relate to incidents for which no final determination had been made. The Court rejected that finding and stated that:

"...we note that one court has suggested that complaint follow-up reports are exempt from disclosure because they constitute nonfinal intra-agency material, irrespective of whether the information contained in the reports is 'factual data' (see, Matter of Scott v. Chief Medical Examiner, 179 AD2d 443, 444, supra citing Public Officers Law §87(2)(g)). However, under a plain reading of §87(2)(g), the exemption for intra-agency material does not apply as long as the material falls within any one of the provision's four enumerated exceptions. Thus, intra-agency documents that contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' are subject to FOIL disclosure, whether or not embodied in a final agency policy or determination (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosp. Corp., 62 NY2d 75, 83, supra; Matter of MacRae v. Dolce, 130 AD2d 577)... [Gould et al. v. New York City Police Department, 87 NY2d 267, 276 (1996)].

In short, that a record is "predecisional" or "non-final" would not represent an end of an analysis of rights of access or an agency's obligation to review the contents of a record.

The Court also dealt with the issue of what constitutes "factual data" that must be disclosed under §87(2)(g)(i). In its consideration of the matter, the Court found that:

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87(2)(g)(i)). Factual data,

Mr. Stephen Perelson, Esq.

therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182) id., 276-277).]

In my view, insofar as the records at issue consist of recommendations, advice or opinions, for example, offered by District employees, they may be withheld; insofar as they consist of statistical or factual information, I believe that they must be disclosed.

I note that the Court in Gould also stressed that §87(2)(g) deals with communications between and among government officers and employees. Therefore, insofar as the report consists of statements by or interviews with parents, students or others who are not officers or employees of the District, §87(2)(g) would not serve as a basis for denial. Nevertheless, as suggested earlier, other grounds for denial, such as those associated with the attorney-client privilege, attorney work product, FERPA and unwarranted invasions of personal privacy, may be applicable.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Lue-Shing:

I have received your letter of August 19. You have sought an advisory opinion concerning whether an agency's failure to respond to an appeal may be construed as "an affirmation of denial of the original request for the purposes of instituting a proceeding pursuant to Article 78 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules."

In this regard, by way of background, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which an agency must respond to requests and appeals. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. The staff of the Committee on Open Government is authorized to issue advisory opinions. The ensuing staff advisory opinion is based solely upon the information presented in your correspondence.

Dear Mr. Brooks:

I have received your letter of August 19 in which you asked that I review correspondence concerning your efforts in acquiring information from the Division of Parole.

Citing the Freedom of Information Law, you asked that the Division of Parole produce records indicating the Division's "legal and statutorily binding definition of what constitutes "reasonable probability", "live and remain at liberty without violating the law", "incompatible with the welfare of society", and similar phrases. In a letter addressed to you by Ann C. Crowell, she indicated that "your request is not a proper request under the Freedom of Information Law", and I agree with her contention.

In this regard, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records and that §89(3) of that statute provides in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request for information. I would conjecture that the Division of Parole has not prepared or adopted "legal and statutorily binding" definitions of the phrases to which you referred. If that is so, the request would not involve existing records, and the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

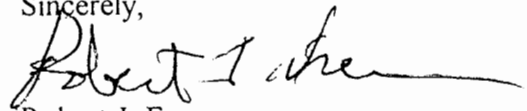

Similarly, your request for a "copy of the parole board commissioner's statutory authority to determine what programs an inmate should take before becoming eligible for release consideration" is not, in my view, a request for a record. In essence, it is a request for an interpretation of law requiring a judgment. Any number of provisions might be applicable, and a disclosure of some of them, based on one's knowledge, may be incomplete due to an absence of expertise regarding the content and interpretation of each such law. Further, two people, even or perhaps especially two attorneys, might differ as to the applicability of a given provision of law. In contrast, if a request is made, for example, for "section 500 of the Correction Law", no interpretation or judgment is necessary, for sections of the law appear numerically and can readily be identified. That kind of request, in my opinion would involve a portion of a record that must be disclosed. Again, a request for laws that might be applicable is not, in my view, a request for a record as envisioned by the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify misunderstandings and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Ms. Barbara J. Zitwer

Dear Ms. Zitwer:

I have received your letter of August 30 in which you sought assistance in relation to your efforts in obtaining records from the New York City Police Department. Based on your commentary, I offer the following remarks.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which an agency must respond to requests and appeals. Specifically, section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with section 89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under section 89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Further, it is noted that a recent decision involved a situation in which requests were made, but the agency engaged in continual delays and failed to grant or deny access to the records sought. When the applicant initiated a judicial proceeding, the agency contended that petitioner had failed to exhaust her administrative remedies. In a discussion of the matter, the decision states that:

"The respondent contends that petitioner failed to appeal the denial of access to records within 30 days to the agency head as provided in Public Officers Law [section] 89(4)(a) and, therefore, may not bring this proceeding.

"The petitioner alleges that Public Officers Law [section] 89(4)(a) is not applicable as petitioner's FOIL requests has never been decided by respondent as respondent's only correspondence in response to petitioner's application indicates only that the matter is under investigation.

"While the papers, for both sides, in this proceeding fail to discuss the issue of constructive denial, it has been found that the failure of an agency to respond to a FOIL request, as provided for in Public Officers Law [section] 89(3), can be construed as a denial of said request. In the case of Mtr. Robertson v. Chairman, 122 Misc 2d 829, the court held the failure of the Division of Parole to respond within five days to a letter from petitioner requesting access to certain information contained in his parole records is properly construed as a denial of his request...

"It, therefore, appears that respondent's failure in this particular proceeding to neither grant nor deny the petitioner's request may be construed as a denial of access that may be appealed to the agency head" (Bernstein v. City of New York, Supreme Court, New York County, NYLJ, November 7, 1990).

In addition, by failing to provide an approximate date when the request would be granted or denied in its acknowledgement of the receipt of the request, the court found that the agency placed the applicant "in a 'Catch-22' position" (id.).

As you are aware, the person designated by the Department to determine appeals is Susan Petito, Special Counsel.

Second, when an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

I point out that in Key v. Hynes [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search". However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when "the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made" [Thomas v. Records Access Officer, 613 NYS 2d 929, 205 AD 2d 786 (1994)].

Lastly, since you stressed that you want complete records, "all, not an edited version", I point out that there may be circumstances in which records may be withheld in whole or in part. While I am unfamiliar with the records of your interest, I point out as a general matter that the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Wright:

I have received your letter of September 30 addressed to the Department of State in which your requested certain court records from this office.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning public access to government records, primarily under the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not have possession or control of records generally. In short, neither the Department of State nor the Committee can provide the records of your interest, because neither maintains the records.

It is noted that the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. Even though other statutes may deal with access to court records, the procedural provisions associated with the Freedom of Information Law (i.e., those involving the designation of a records access officer or the right to appeal a denial) would not ordinarily be applicable. It is suggested that a request be made to the clerk of the court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Harvey M. Elentuck

Dear Mr. Elentuck:

I have received your letter of August 24 in which you raised questions in relation to your request made under the Freedom of Information Law to the Office of the Special Commissioner of Investigation for the New York City School District.

You asked initially whether you should have quoted a certain provision in the Freedom of Information Law rather than merely citing that provision. In my view, so long as the citation was given, there would have been no necessity or obligation to quote the provision.

With respect to the other matters to which you referred, the issue in my view involves the extent to which your request "reasonably described" the records as required by section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law. Although that standard has been the subject of other correspondence with you, I will reiterate guidance offered in the past.

As indicated previously, it has been held by the Court of Appeals that to deny a request on the ground that it fails to reasonably describe the records, an agency must establish that "the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

The Court in Konigsberg found that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth and also stated that:

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479

October 13, 1999

Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency']" (id. at 250).

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping system. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

While I am unfamiliar with the recordkeeping systems of the agency, to extent that the records sought can be located with reasonable effort, I believe that the request would have met the requirement of reasonably describing the records. On the other hand, if the records are not maintained in a manner that permits their retrieval except by reviewing perhaps hundreds or even thousands of records individually in an effort to locate those falling within the scope of the request, to that extent, the request would not in my opinion meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Merton Simpson
[REDACTED]
[REDACTED]

Dear Mr. Simpson:

I have received your letter of August 19 and the materials attached to it.

Among the materials is a record apparently prepared by the Department of Civil Service entitled "Eligible List Scores Distribution by Race and Sex" in relation to a "battery exam." You have asked whether similar records "would have to be produced by Civil Service for all the Battery Exams and simulations of exams [you] have requested through previous FOIL's if they have the capability." In response to an appeal, you were informed that "eligible list scores distribution by race and sex are not available because the Battery Tests do not produce an eligible list" and that "an eligible list scores distribution report which had been released to you should not have been created."

From my perspective, the issue involves whether the Department has the ability to generate the records of your interest based on its existing computer programs. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. Section 89(3) of that statute states in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request.

Second, §86(4) of the Freedom of Information Law defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

In view of the language quoted above, if information is maintained in some physical form, it would in my opinion constitute a "record" subject to rights of access conferred by the Law. Further, the definition of "record" includes specific reference to computer tapes and discs, and it was held soon after the enactment of the current version of the Freedom of Information Law that "[i]nformation is increasingly being stored in computers and access to such data should not be restricted merely because it is not in printed form" [Babigian v. Evans, 427 NYS 2d 688, 691 (1980); aff'd 97 AD 2d 992 (1983); see also, Szikszy v. Buelow, 436 NYS 2d 558 (1981)].

When information is maintained electronically, it has been advised that if the information sought is available under the Freedom of Information Law and may be retrieved by means of existing computer programs, an agency is required to disclose the information. In that kind of situation, the agency in my view would merely be retrieving data that it has the capacity to retrieve. Disclosure may be accomplished either by printing out the data on paper or perhaps by duplicating the data on another storage mechanism, such as a computer tape or disk.

On the other hand, if information sought can be retrieved from a computer or other storage medium only by means of new programming or the alteration of existing programs, those steps would, in my opinion, be the equivalent of creating a new record. Since §89(3) does not require an agency to create a record, I do not believe that an agency would be required to reprogram or develop new programs to retrieve information that would otherwise be available [see Guerrier v. Hernandez-Cuebas, 165 AD 2d 218 (1991)].

Lastly, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Assuming that the information of your interest can be generated by means of the Department's existing computer programs, I believe that it would be available. In short, insofar as intra-agency materials consist of "statistical or factual tabulations or data", they must be disclosed pursuant to section 87(2)(g)(i), unless a different ground for denial applies. In my view, none of the grounds for denial would be applicable or pertinent.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. James Wright
97-R-3002
Gowanda Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 311
Gowanda, NY 14070-0311

Dear Mr. Wright:

I have received your letter of August 17. As I understand the matter, it is your view that a corrections counselor at your facility has acted inappropriately, and you asked that this office investigate. It also appears that you are interested in obtaining records pertaining to the counselor concerning "disciplinary sanctions for bizarre or abus[ive] behavior..."

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice relating to public access to government records, primarily under the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not have the authority to conduct investigations concerning the conduct of public employees. It is suggested that you contact the proper officials at the Department of Correctional Services in relation to your allegations.

With respect to access to records involving "disciplinary sanctions", by way of background, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §50-a of the Civil Rights Law. In brief, that statute provides that personnel records of police and correction officers that are used to evaluate performance toward continued employment or promotion are confidential. The Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, in reviewing the legislative history leading to its enactment, has held that the exemption from disclosure conferred by §50-a of the Civil Rights Law "was designed to limit access to said personnel records by criminal defense counsel, who used the contents of the records, cross-examination" [Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY2d 562, 568 (1986)]. In another decision which dealt with unsubstantiated complaints against correction officers, the Court of Appeals held that the purpose of §50-a "was to prevent the release of sensitive personnel records that could be used in litigation for purposes of harassing or embarrassing correction officers" [Prisoners' Legal Services v. NYS Department of Correctional Services, 73 NY 2d 26, 538 NYS 2d 190, 191 (1988)]. The Court in an opinion rendered earlier this year reiterated its view of §50-a, citing that decision and stating that:

“...we recognized that the decisive factor in determining whether an officer’s personnel record was exempted from FOIL disclosure under Civil Rights Law § 50-a was the potential use of the information contained therein, not the specific purpose of the particular individual requesting access, nor whether the request was actually made in contemplation of litigation.

‘Documents pertaining to misconduct or rules violations by corrections officers – which could well be used in various ways against the officers – are the very sort of record which  was intended to be kept confidential.  The legislative purpose underlying section 50-a  was  to protect the officers from the use of records  as a means for harassment and reprisals and for the purpose of cross-examination’ (73 NY2d, at 31 [emphasis supplied])” (Daily Gazette v. City of Schenectady, 93 NY2d 145, 156- 157 (1999)).

If the person in question is a correction officer, I believe that the records of your interest would be exempt from disclosure pursuant to §50-a of the Civil Rights Law.

If the employee is not a correction officer, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law would be the governing statute, and that final determinations reflective of findings of misconduct would in my view be available. Pertinent to an analysis of rights of access would be two of the grounds for denial.

Section 87(2)(b) permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". While the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public officers employees. It is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public officers and employees are required to be more accountable than others. With regard to records pertaining to public officers and employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a their official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, supra; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977].

The other ground for denial of significance, §87(2)(g), states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. Insofar as a request involves final agency determinations, I believe that those determinations must be disclosed, again, unless a different ground for denial could be asserted.

In terms of the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, in situations in which allegations or charges have resulted in the issuance of a written reprimand, disciplinary action, or findings that public employees have engaged in misconduct, records reflective of those kinds of determinations have been found to be available, including the names of those who are the subjects of disciplinary action [see Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); also Farrell, Geneva Printing, Scaccia and Sinicropi, supra].

In contrast, when allegations or charges of misconduct have not yet been determined or did not result in disciplinary action or a finding of misconduct, the records relating to such allegations may, in my view, be withheld, for disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Herald Company v. School District of City of Syracuse, 430 NYS 2d 460 (1980)]. Similarly, to the extent that charges are dismissed or allegations are found to be without merit, I believe that they may be withheld.

In sum, if the person who is the subject of your inquiry is a correction officer, I believe that §50-a of the Civil Rights Law would govern, and that a court order would be needed to obtain the records. If, however, that person is not a correction officer, the Freedom of Information Law would govern, and the records would be accessible to the extent described above.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Peter Henner
Attorney and Counselor at Law
P.O. Box 326
Clarksville, NY 12041-0326

Dear Mr. Henner:

I have received your letter of August 27 in which you sought an advisory opinion concerning a denial of access to records by the Office of Real Property Services (ORPS).

By way of background, in a request directed to ORPS, you sought records "which pertain or relate to the decision of the [ORPS] to accelerate the 1999 state equalization relate for 'several municipalities across the state because of recognized equalization problems,' including the City of Oswego School District." A variety of materials were made available to you, but ORPS denied access to "several statistical analyses provided by Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation [hereafter "NIMO"]." NIMO claimed that the record at issue maybe withheld pursuant to §87(2)(d) of the Freedom of Information Law and asked ORPS to keep it confidential in accordance with §89(5) of that statute. Based on a letter sent to ORPS by NIMO, the record consists of "a computer program" developed by NIMO to evaluate different taxation scenarios concerning NMPC's real property" that "projects future Niagara Mohawk property taxes as a component of its operating costs". NIMO contended that "release of the requested information could permit an unfair advantage to competitors and cause substantial injury to the competitive position of Niagara Mohawk." NIMO also contended that your request is "vague" and fails to indicate your purpose or the intended use of the computer program. ORPS honored NIMO's request for confidentiality and indicated that the latter's position creates "a triable issue of fact."

It is your view that NIMO "is not competing with any other entity generating electrical power and that:

"Prior to the approval of Niagara Mohawk's Power Choice plan by the Public Service Commission in 1998, Niagara Mohawk must divest itself of all of the property in question. Therefore, Niagara Mohawk never was competing with the owners of generation assets, nor does Niagara Mohawk presently compete with any other owner of real property. Consequently, disclosure of this information will not injure Niagara Mohawk's competitive position.

"Furthermore, information regarding the possible variations in assessment of real property cannot be compared to information pertaining to the pricing of insurance products. Insurance products are sold in a competitive market; in contrast, the assessment of property is not a competitive activity, and, in any event, Niagara Mohawk did not have any competitors who owned electrical generating facilities which were also paying real property taxes."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the purpose for which the request was made is, in my opinion, irrelevant. In brief, it has been held that when records are accessible under the Freedom of Information Law, they must be made equally available "to any person, without regard to status or interest" [Burke v. Yudelson, 51 AD2d 673 (1976); also Farbman v. New York City, 62 NY2d 75 (1984)]. As such, your intended use of the record is not pertinent to a determination of your rights of access.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. As suggested in the materials, the only ground of denial of significance is §87(2)(d), which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof that:

"are trade secrets or are submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise or derived from information obtained from a commercial enterprise and which if disclosed would cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the subject enterprise..."

Further, when a commercial entity is required to submit records to a state agency, pursuant to §89(5), it may request, at the time of submission, that the records or portions thereof be kept confidential in accordance with §87(2)(d), and ORPS, through its responses to you, has indicated that the record is being withheld on that basis.

In my opinion, the question under §87(2)(d) involves the extent, if any, to which disclosure would "cause substantial injury to the competitive position" of a commercial entity.

The concept and parameters of what might constitute a "trade secret" were discussed in Kewanee Oil Co. v. Bicron Corp., which was decided by the United States Supreme Court in 1973

(416 (U.S. 470). Central to the issue was a definition of "trade secret" upon which reliance is often based. Specifically, the Court cited the Restatement of Torts, section 757, comment b (1939), which states that:

"[a] trade secret may consist of any formula, pattern, device or compilation of information which is used in one's business, and which gives him an opportunity to obtain an advantage over competitors who do not know or use it. It may be a formula for a chemical compound, a process of manufacturing, treating or preserving materials, a pattern for a machine or other device, or a list of customers" (id. at 474, 475).

In its review of the definition, the court stated that "[T]he subject of a trade secret must be secret, and must not be of public knowledge or of a general knowledge in the trade or business" (id.). The phrase "trade secret" is more extensively defined in 104 NY Jur 2d 234 to mean:

"...a formula, process, device or compilation of information used in one's business which confers a competitive advantage over those in similar businesses who do not know it or use it. A trade secret, like any other secret, is something known to only one or a few and kept from the general public, and not susceptible to general knowledge. Six factors are to be considered in determining whether a trade secret exists: (1) the extent to which the information is known outside the business; (2) the extent to which it is known by a business' employees and others involved in the business; (3) the extent of measures taken by a business to guard the secrecy of the information; (4) the value of the information to a business and to its competitors; (5) the amount of effort or money expended by a business in developing the information; and (6) the ease or difficulty with which the information could be properly acquired or duplicated by others. If there has been a voluntary disclosure by the plaintiff, or if the facts pertaining to the matter are a subject of general knowledge in the trade, then any property right has evaporated."

From my perspective, the nature of record, the area of commerce in which a commercial entity is involved and the presence of the conditions described above that must be found to characterize records as trade secrets would be the factors used to determine the extent to which disclosure would "cause substantial injury to the competitive position" of a commercial enterprise. Therefore, the proper assertion of §87(2)(d) would be dependent upon the facts and, again, the effect of disclosure upon the competitive position of the entity to which the records relate.

Relevant to the analysis is a decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, which, for the first time, considered the phrase "substantial competitive injury" [Encore College Bookstores, Inc. v. Auxiliary Service Corporation of the State University of New York at Farmingdale, 87 NY2d 410 (1995)]. In that decision, the Court reviewed the legislative history of the Freedom of Information

Law as it pertains to §87(2)(d), and due to the analogous nature of equivalent exception in the federal Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. §552), it relied in part upon federal judicial precedent.

In its discussion of the issue, the Court stated that:

"FOIL fails to define substantial competitive injury. Nor has this Court previously interpreted the statutory phrase. FOIA, however, contains a similar exemption for 'commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential' (see, 5 USC § 552[b][4]). Commercial information, moreover, is 'confidential' if it would impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or cause 'substantial harm to the competitive position' of the person from whom the information was obtained...

"As established in Worthington Compressors v Costle (662 F2d 45, 51 [DC Cir]), whether 'substantial competitive harm' exists for purposes of FOIA's exemption for commercial information turns on the commercial value of the requested information to competitors and the cost of acquiring it through other means. Because the submitting business can suffer competitive harm only if the desired material has commercial value to its competitors, courts must consider how valuable the information will be to the competing business, as well as the resultant damage to the submitting enterprise. Where FOIA disclosure is the sole means by which competitors can obtain the requested information, the inquiry ends here.

"Where, however, the material is available from other sources at little or no cost, its disclosure is unlikely to cause competitive damage to the submitting commercial enterprise. On the other hand, as explained in Worthington:

Because competition in business turns on the relative costs and opportunities faced by members of the same industry, there is a potential windfall for competitors to whom valuable information is released under FOIA. If those competitors are charged only minimal FOIA retrieval costs for the information, rather than the considerable costs of private reproduction, they may be getting quite a bargain. Such bargains could easily have competitive consequences not contemplated as part of FOIA's principal aim of promoting openness in government (id., 419-420).

The Court also observed that the reasoning underlying these considerations is consistent with the policy behind §87(2)(d) to protect businesses from the deleterious consequences of disclosing confidential commercial information so as to further the state's economic development efforts and attract business to New York (id.). In applying those considerations to Encore's request, the Court concluded that the submitting enterprise was not required to establish actual competitive harm; rather, it was required, in the words of Gulf and Western Industries v. United States, 615 F.2d 527, 530 (D.C. Cir., 1979) to show "actual competition and the likelihood of substantial competitive injury" (id., at 421).

I do not have sufficient knowledge to suggest that §87(2)(d) would or would not be applicable, but it appears that certain of your contentions may be accurate, i.e., that NIMO may not be competing locally with generators of electrical power or with owners of real property. However, a representative of ORPS has indicated that the ability of that agency to function effectively on behalf of the public might be damaged if it could not obtain the record or the kind of record at issue. As indicated by the Court of Appeals, commercial information might properly be withheld if disclosure "would impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future." The extent to which that would be so is unknown to me. Perhaps more importantly, while NIMO may not compete in the areas to which you referred, as stated earlier, it has contended that the computer program "projects future...property taxes as a component of its operating costs" and that, therefore, disclosure "could permit an unfair advantage to competitors and cause substantial injury to [its] competitive position..."

Without greater knowledge of the industry in which NIMO functions, I cannot evaluate the merits of its contentions. Nevertheless, I am in general agreement with your suggestion that "ORPS cannot properly deny a FOIL request based on an assertion that Niagara Mohawk's position creates 'a triable issue of fact,' but instead, can only deny access of ORPS believes that it can sustain the burden of proof with respect to any such 'triable issue of fact'". As I view §89(5) of the Freedom of Information Law, when a commercial enterprise seeks a guarantee that the agency to which its records are submitted will not disclose the records, and the agency confers confidentiality and upholds the guarantee of confidentiality following an appeal by a person whose request for the record has been denied, the agency has the burden of proof in its defense of the denial in any ensuing proceeding commenced for review of the denial. Stated differently, to continue the protection accorded by §89(5), and agency must believe that it can prove to a court that disclosure would, in fact, cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the commercial enterprise that submitted the record. If the agency does not believe that it can meet that burden proof or does not have sufficient knowledge or information to ascertain the merits of the commercial entity's contentions, I believe that it should indicate that the request to the person seeking the record will be granted, in which case, following the exhaustion of administrative remedies, the commercial entity that submitted the record has fifteen days to commence a proceeding for the purpose of demonstrating to a court that disclosure would cause substantial injury to its competitive position.

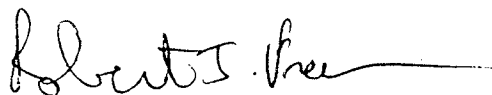

As indicated earlier, agency records are presumptively available under the Freedom of Information Law, including those submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise. In my opinion, while §89(5) provides additional protection to commercial enterprises that are required to submit records to state agencies, its terms preserve the presumption of access and place the burden of defending secrecy either on a state agency based on its belief that disclosure would cause substantial injury to the competitive possession of a commercial enterprise, or on the commercial enterprise. It appears that the position taken by ORPS essentially forces the applicant for the record to expend time, effort and money to seek judicial review of the agency's denial of access. When the justification for the assertion of §87(2)(d) involves a "triable issue of fact", rather than the agency's assertion that the exception has been properly invoked and that it can meet the burden of proof, I believe that the agency, under §89(5), in recognition of the presumption of access, is obliged to conditionally grant the applicant's request. Thereafter, the commercial entity claiming that disclosure would cause substantial injury to its competitive position may choose to initiate a proceeding to defend against disclosure in which it would have the burden of proof. In that event, the commercial enterprise, rather than the person seeking the records, would bear the expense and burden of attempting to block disclosure and litigating the matter.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Thompson:

I have received a series of letters from you dated October 10 through 14 in which you wrote that you would "like to appeal" denials of access to information by various agencies.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to determine appeals or otherwise compel an agency to grant or deny access to records.

The provision in the Freedom of Information Law pertaining to the right to appeal, §89(4)(a), states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person thereof designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Cruz:

I have received your undated letter which reached this office on October 13 in which you appealed a denial of access to records by an official at your facility.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to determine appeals or otherwise compel an agency to grant or deny access to records.

The provision in the Freedom of Information Law pertaining to the right to appeal, §89(4)(a), states in relevant part that:

Mr. William Phelps
Lansing Faculty Association
Lansing High School
300 Ridge Road
Lansing, NY 14882

Dear Mr. Phelps:

I have received your letter of August 26 in which you wrote that the Lansing Central School District "has employed the district superintendent's secretary to take notes at all executive sessions." The District denied access to the notes based on a judicial decision, Wm. J. Kline & Sons, Inc. v. County of Hamilton [235 AD2d 44 (1997)], a contention that the notes constitute intra-agency materials that are exempt from disclosure, and its position that notes are not District records but rather are the personal property of the Superintendent.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to all agency records, and §86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

The Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, has construed the definition as broadly as its specific language suggests. The first such decision that dealt squarely with the scope of the term "record" involved documents pertaining to a lottery sponsored by a fire department. Although the agency contended that the documents did not pertain to the performance of its official duties, i.e., fighting fires, but rather to a "nongovernmental" activity, the Court rejected the claim of a "governmental versus nongovernmental dichotomy" [see Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581 (1980)] and found that the documents constituted "records" subject to rights of access granted by the Law. Moreover, the Court determined that:

"The statutory definition of 'record' makes nothing turn on the purpose for which it relates. This conclusion accords with the spirit as well as the letter of the statute. For not only are the expanding boundaries of governmental activity increasingly difficult to draw, but in perception, if not in actuality, there is bound to be considerable crossover between governmental and nongovernmental activities, especially where both are carried on by the same person or persons" (id.).

In another decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, the Court focused on an agency claim that it could "engage in unilateral prescreening of those documents which it deems to be outside of the scope of FOIL" and found that such activity "would be inconsistent with the process set forth in the statute" [Capital Newspapers v. Whalen, 69 NY 2d 246, 253 (1987)]. The Court determined that:

"...the procedure permitting an unreviewable prescreening of documents - which respondents urge us to engraft on the statute - could be used by an uncooperative and obdurate public official or agency to block an entirely legitimate request. There would be no way to prevent a custodian of records from removing a public record from FOIL's reach by simply labeling it 'purely private.' Such a construction, which would thwart the entire objective of FOIL by creating an easy means of avoiding compliance, should be rejected" (id., 254).

Further, in a case involving notes taken by the Secretary to the Board of Regents that he characterized as "personal" in conjunction with a contention that he took notes in part "as a private person making personal notes of observations...in the course of" meetings. In that decision, the court cited the definition of "record" and determined that the notes did not consist of personal property but rather were records subject to rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law [Warder v. Board of Regents, 410 NYS 2d 742, 743 (1978)].

In short, I believe that the notes in question are "records" that fall within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

I am mindful of the Kline decision, in which it was held that tape recordings of executive sessions are exempted from disclosure by statute in accordance with §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. The court reasoned that executive sessions, and that, therefore, a verbatim account of the discussion during executive sessions are confidential. While I respect the Court's decision, I respectfully disagree. There is nothing in the Open Meetings Law that specifies that what is said or heard during an executive session is confidential. Significantly, even when a public body clearly has the authority to enter into an executive session, there is no obligation to do so; the ability to conduct an executive session must be preceded by a vote carried by a majority of the total membership of a public body. If the vote does not carry, a public body may discuss the matter in public. Again, very simply, while it may not be ethical, wise or in the best interest of the public to divulge what transpired during an executive session, I do not believe that the information acquired or shared during an executive session is statutorily exempt from disclosure.

The foregoing is not intended to suggest that the notes would be accessible, even if the Court in Kline had reached a different conclusion. As indicated in response to your request, the notes would constitute "intra-agency" materials that fall within §87(2)(g). That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

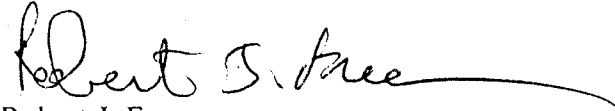

Further, there may be other grounds for denial that are pertinent. For instance, a record of a discussion regarding an employee's health condition would if disclosed constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" and could be withheld under §87(2)(b). A record of a discussion of the Board's strategy in its negotiations with a union would likely impair collective bargaining negotiations and be deniable under §87(2)(c).

In sum, I believe that the notes are subject to rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law, but that their contents could likely be withheld in great measure even if the Kline decision had not been rendered.

Mr. Jack McAndrew

Dear Mr. McAndrew:

I have received your letter of August 24. In brief, you asked whether the Orange-Ulster BOCES is required to maintain and make available a "subject matter list" and appoint an appeals officer.

In this regard, as you are aware, §87(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in relevant part that:

"Each agency shall maintain...

c. A reasonably detailed current list by subject matter, of all records in the possession of the agency, whether or not available under this article."

The "subject matter list" required to be maintained under §87(3)(c) is not, in my opinion, required to identify each and every record of an agency' rather I believe that it must refer, by category and in reasonable detail, to the kinds of records maintained by an agency. Further, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government state that such a list should be sufficiently detailed to enable an individual to identify a file category of the record or records in which that person may be interested [21 NYCRR 1401.6(b)]. I emphasize that §87(3)(c) does not require that an agency ascertain which among its records must be made available or may be withheld. Again, the Law states that the subject matter list must refer, in reasonable detail, to the kinds of records maintained by an agency, whether or not they are available. It has been suggested that the records retention and disposal schedules developed by the State Archives and Records Administration at the State Education Department may be used as a substitute for the subject matter list.

Since the subject matter list must be maintained on an ongoing basis, I do not believe that there is any basis for a delay in disclosure.

With respect to the designation of an appeals officer, by way of background, §89(1)(b)(iii) of the Freedom of Information Law requires the Committee on Open Government to promulgate regulations concerning the procedural aspects of the Law (see 21 NYCRR Part 1401). In turn, §87(1)(a) of the Law states that:

“the governing body of each public corporation shall promulgate uniform rules and regulations for all agencies in such public corporation pursuant to such general rules and regulations as may be promulgated by the committee on open government in conformity with the provisions of this article, pertaining to the administration of this article.”

In this instance, the governing body of a public corporation, the Boces board, is required to promulgate appropriate rules and regulations consistent with those adopted by the Committee on Open Government and with the Freedom of Information Law.

The provision dealing with the right to appeal a denial of access to records is found in §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Further, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), which govern the procedural aspects of the Law, state that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation or the head, chief executive or governing body of other agencies shall hear appeals or shall designate a person or body to hear appeals regarding denial of access to records under the Freedom of Information Law.

(b) Denial of access shall be in writing stating the reason therefor and advising the person denied access of his or her right to appeal to the person or body established to hear appeals, and that person or body shall be identified by name, title, business address and business telephone number. The records access officer shall not be the appeals officer" (section 1401.7).

Mr. Jack McAndrew

It is also noted that the state's highest court has held that a failure to inform a person denied access to records of the right to appeal enables that person to seek judicial review of a denial. Citing the Committee's regulations and the Freedom of Information Law, the Court of Appeals in Barrett v. Morgenthau held that:

"[i]nasmuch as the District Attorney failed to advise petitioner of the availability of an administrative appeal in the office (see, 21 NYCRR 1401.7[b]) and failed to demonstrate in the proceeding that the procedures for such an appeal had, in fact, even been established (see, Public Officers Law [section] 87[1][b], he cannot be heard to complain that petitioner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies" [74 NY 2d 907, 909 (1989)].

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of their obligations under the Freedom of Information Law, copies of this opinion will be forwarded to BOCES officials.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Ms. Owen:

I have received your letter in which you sought guidance concerning a situation in which a parent seeks copies of records pertaining to her child, you indicate that the fee for copies is 25 cents per page, but she says that she cannot afford to pay the fee.

In this regard, when records are accessible to an individual, he or she may inspect them at no charge. If copies are requested, §87(1)(b)(iii) of the Freedom of Information Law authorizes an agency to charge up to 25 cents per photocopy up to 9 by 14 inches. I note that it has been held that an agency may charge its established fee, even when the applicant for records is indigent [see Whitehead v. Morgenthau, 552 NYS2d 518 (1990)].

Notwithstanding the foregoing, there is nothing in the Freedom of Information Law that prohibits an agency from waiving the fee for copies. As such, you could choose to waive the fee. It is also noted that many agencies waive fees as a matter of policy when the request involves a minimal number of copies. Their finding is that it costs more to accomplish the administrative tasks associated with taking in a small amount of money than the amount of the fee.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Smith:

I have received your letter of August 24 in which you sought assistance in obtaining records from the office of the Schenectady County Clerk and the Office of the District Attorney. The records in question are lab reports and analyses.

In this regard, it appears that you may be requesting court records from the County Clerk. If that is so, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply. That statute pertains to agency records, and §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the foregoing, while the office of a district attorney is clearly an "agency" required to comply with the Freedom of Information Law, the courts and court records are beyond the coverage of that law. This not to suggest that court records may not be accessible; on the contrary, court records are generally available under other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255). When seeking court records, it is recommended that a request be made to clerk of the appropriate court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

As the Freedom of Information Law pertains to agencies, such as the office of a district attorney, it is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, three of the grounds for denial are likely relevant to an analysis of rights of access to the records sought.

Section 87(2)(g) permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Perhaps most relevant would be §87(2)(e)(iv), which states that an agency may withhold records compiled for law enforcement purposes when disclosure would "reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

The leading decision concerning §87(2)(e)(iv) is Fink v. Lefkowitz, which involved access to a manual prepared by a special prosecutor that investigated nursing homes, in which the Court of Appeals held that:

"The purpose of this exemption is obvious. Effective law enforcement demands that violators of the law not be apprised the nonroutine procedures by which an agency obtains its information (see Frankel v. Securities & Exch. Comm., 460 F2d 813, 817, cert den 409 US 889). However beneficial its thrust, the purpose of the Freedom of Information Law is not to enable persons to use agency records to frustrate pending or threatened investigations nor to use that information to construct a defense to impede a prosecution...

"Indicative, but not necessarily dispositive of whether investigative techniques are nonroutine is whether disclosure of those procedures would give rise to a substantial likelihood that violators could evade detection by deliberately tailoring their conduct in anticipation of avenues of inquiry to be pursued by agency personnel (see Cox v. United States Dept. of Justice, 576 F2d 1302, 1307-1308; City of Concord v. Ambrose, 333 F Supp 958)."

As the Court of Appeals has suggested, to the extent that the records in question include descriptions of investigative techniques which if disclosed would enable potential lawbreakers to evade detection or endanger the lives or safety of law enforcement personnel or others.

The remaining ground for denial of possible significance, §87(2)(f), authorizes an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person." The facts and circumstances of the matter would determine the extent to which that provision might be applicable.

Lastly, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which an agency (not a court, because a court is not an "agency") must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

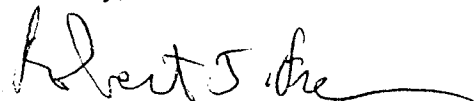

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Sanchez:

I have received your letter of August 23 and the correspondence attached to it. You have sought my views concerning a request for records relating to the discipline or dismissal of an employee of the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner of New York City.

In this regard, first, in consideration of the initial response to your request, I note that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. If the agency to which the request was made does not maintain the records of your interest, that statute would not apply.

Second, insofar as the records sought do exist, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, two of the grounds for denial are relevant in consideration of rights of access to the records in question.

Relevant to an analysis is §87(2)(b), which permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". While the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public officers employees. It is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public officers and employees are required to be more accountable than others. With regard to records pertaining to public officers and employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a their official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co.

v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, supra; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977].

The other ground for denial of significance, §87(2)(g), states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. Insofar as a request involves final agency determinations, I believe that those determinations must be disclosed, again, unless a different ground for denial could be asserted.

In terms of the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, in situations in which allegations or charges have resulted in the issuance of a written reprimand, disciplinary action, or findings that public employees have engaged in misconduct, records reflective of those kinds of determinations have been found to be available, including the names of those who are the subjects of disciplinary action [see Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); also Farrell, Geneva Printing, Scaccia and Sinicropi, supra].

In contrast, when allegations or charges of misconduct have not yet been determined or did not result in disciplinary action or a finding of misconduct, the records relating to such allegations may, in my view, be withheld, for disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Herald Company v. School District of City of Syracuse, 430 NYS 2d 460 (1980)].

Mr. Robert Sanchez

Similarly, to the extent that charges are dismissed or allegations are found to be without merit, I believe that they may be withheld.

Dear Kris:

Your inquiry sent to the Department of State has been forwarded to the Committee on Open Government. The Committee, a unit of the Department, is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law.

You indicated that you are attempting to locate an uncle who has been "missing" for twenty-five years, and that his last known location was the Albany County Jail. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, there is no central source of information about individuals, and it may be difficult if not impossible to locate a missing person through entirely legal means. As a general matter, a request made under the Freedom of Information Law should be made to the "records access officer" at the agency or agencies that you believe would maintain the records of your interest. The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests for records. I note, too, that an applicant seeking records under the Freedom of Information Law must "reasonably describe" the records sought. Therefore, a request must include sufficient detail to enable the staff at an agency to locate and identify records with reasonable effort. A request for records based on a name alone likely would not satisfy the requirement that it reasonably describe the records.

Second, since you referred to the Albany County Jail, I point out that it is required to permanently maintain a log containing information pertaining to every person who has been in its custody. Specifically, §500-f of the Correction Law, which pertains to county jails, states that:

"Each keeper shall keep a daily record, to be provided at the expense of the county, of the commitments and discharges of all prisoners delivered to his charge, which shall contain the date of entrance, name, offense, term of sentence, fine, age, sex, place of birth, color, social relations, education, secular and religious, for what any by whom committed, how and when discharged, trade or occupation, whether so employed when arrested, number of previous convictions. The daily record shall be a public record, and shall be kept permanently in the office of the keeper."

It is suggested that you refer to that provision in an attempt to obtain information from the Jail.

Lastly, often individuals are incarcerated temporarily in county jails and later transferred to state correctional facilities. As such, it is also suggested that you contact the Department of Correctional Services to determine whether your uncle has been incarcerated in a state correctional facility. That agency has a website that includes inmates' conviction backgrounds, sentences and parole dates. I am unaware, however, of whether the site includes only relatively current information or older information as well. The address is: www.docs.state.ny.us.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Smith:

I have received your letter of August 24 in which you sought assistance in obtaining records from the office of the Schenectady County Clerk and the Office of the District Attorney. The records in question are lab reports and analyses.

In this regard, it appears that you may be requesting court records from the County Clerk. If that is so, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply. That statute pertains to agency records, and §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the foregoing, while the office of a district attorney is clearly an "agency" required to comply with the Freedom of Information Law, the courts and court records are beyond the coverage of that law. This not to suggest that court records may not be accessible; on the contrary, court records are generally available under other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255). When seeking court records, it is recommended that a request be made to clerk of the appropriate court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

As the Freedom of Information Law pertains to agencies, such as the office of a district attorney, it is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, three of the grounds for denial are likely relevant to an analysis of rights of access to the records sought.

Section 87(2)(g) permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Perhaps most relevant would be §87(2)(e)(iv), which states that an agency may withhold records compiled for law enforcement purposes when disclosure would "reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

The leading decision concerning §87(2)(e)(iv) is Fink v. Lefkowitz, which involved access to a manual prepared by a special prosecutor that investigated nursing homes, in which the Court of Appeals held that:

"The purpose of this exemption is obvious. Effective law enforcement demands that violators of the law not be apprised the nonroutine procedures by which an agency obtains its information (see Frankel v. Securities & Exch. Comm., 460 F2d 813, 817, cert den 409 US 889). However beneficial its thrust, the purpose of the Freedom of Information Law is not to enable persons to use agency records to frustrate pending or threatened investigations nor to use that information to construct a defense to impede a prosecution...

"Indicative, but not necessarily dispositive of whether investigative techniques are nonroutine is whether disclosure of those procedures would give rise to a substantial likelihood that violators could evade detection by deliberately tailoring their conduct in anticipation of avenues of inquiry to be pursued by agency personnel (see Cox v. United States Dept. of Justice, 576 F2d 1302, 1307-1308; City of Concord v. Ambrose, 333 F Supp 958)."

As the Court of Appeals has suggested, to the extent that the records in question include descriptions of investigative techniques which if disclosed would enable potential lawbreakers to evade detection or endanger the lives or safety of law enforcement personnel or others.

The remaining ground for denial of possible significance, §87(2)(f), authorizes an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person." The facts and circumstances of the matter would determine the extent to which that provision might be applicable.

Lastly, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which an agency (not a court, because a court is not an "agency") must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Stormville, NY 12582

Dear Mr. Mosley:

I have received your letter of August 25 in which you complained with respect to delays by the New York City Police Department in responding to your requests for records.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of all of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your request, relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning "complaint follow up reports" prepared by police officers and police officers' memo books in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate.

The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87(2)(g)(i). Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

"However, the Police Department argues that any witness statements contained in the reports, in particular, are not 'factual' because there is no assurance of the statements' accuracy and reliability. We decline to read such a reliability requirement into the phrase 'factual data', as the dissent would have us do, and conclude that a witness statement constitutes factual data insofar as it embodies a factual account of the witness's observations. Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records, as well as others that you requested.

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;

iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or

iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

Lastly, in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available. However, in the same decision, it was also found that:

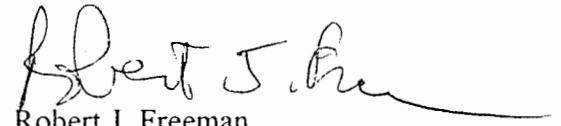

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

The Court in Moore also specified that an agency "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

Dear Mr. Gaston:

I have received your letter of August 22. You have sought my views concerning the propriety of an acknowledgment of the receipt of your request by the Office of the Erie County District Attorney in which you were informed that "you should expect an answer to your request within 45 days of the date of this letter."

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

While an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Christopher Bradford
82-A-5885
Sing Sing Correctional Facility
354 Hunter Street
Ossining, NY 10562

Dear Mr. Bradford:

I have received your letter of August 30 in which you asked that I address seven "points", as well as your contentions offered in a memorandum of law.

In this regard, the authority of the Committee on Open Government to advise is limited to matters pertaining to the statutes within its jurisdiction. In the context of your correspondence, the only such statute is the Freedom of Information Law; this office has neither the jurisdiction nor the expertise to offer advice or opinions relating to the Criminal Procedure Law or a claim of a "liberty interest." That being so, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and §86(3) of that statute defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Based on the foregoing, offices of district attorneys and the Division of Parole are "agencies."

Second, as described in your letter, "a statement (recommendation and or opinion) submitted by any N. Y. City Office of the District Attorney, to the New York State Division/Board of Parole" would constitute "inter-agency material" that falls within the coverage of §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

Mr. Christopher Bradford
October 19, 1999
Page -2-

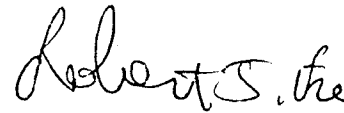

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

I hope that the foregoing clarifies your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Serrano:

I have received your letter of September 1 in which you sought assistance in obtaining your medical records from SUNY Medical Center.

In this regard, since SUNY is a governmental entity, its records would be subject to the Freedom of Information Law. In terms of rights granted by that statute, it is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

With regard to medical records, the Freedom of Information Law, in my view, likely permits that some of those records may be withheld in whole or in part, depending upon their contents. For instance, medical records prepared by hospital personnel could be characterized as "intra-agency materials" that fall within the scope of §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law. To the extent that such materials consist of advice, opinion, recommendation and the like, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law would permit a denial.

Nevertheless, a different statute, §18 of the Public Health Law, generally grants rights of access to medical records to the subjects of the records. As such, that statute may provide greater access to medical records than the Freedom of Information Law. It is suggested that you send your request to the hospital and make specific reference to §18 of the Public Health Law when seeking medical records.

Dear Mr. King:

I have received your letter of August 30 in which you sought my views concerning your right to gain access to records from the Office of the Queens County District Attorney relating to your arrest.

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of all of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your request, relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning "complaint follow up reports" prepared by police officers and police officers' memo books in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate.

The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;

- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87(2)(g)(i). Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

"However, the Police Department argues that any witness statements contained in the reports, in particular, are not 'factual' because there is no assurance of the statements' accuracy and reliability. We decline to read such a reliability requirement into the phrase 'factual data', as the dissent would have us do, and conclude that a witness statement constitutes factual data insofar as it embodies a factual account of the witness's observations. Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records, as well as others that you requested.

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

Lastly, in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available. However, in the same decision, it was also found that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

The Court in Moore also specified that an agency "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. McCarthy:

I have received your letter of August 31, as well as the correspondence attached to it. In brief, you requested a copy of a memorandum from your facility concerning "dispensing times of medication." In response to the request, you were informed that no such document exists, and you have raised a series of questions relating to the matter.

In this regard, in view of your questions, I point out that the advisory jurisdiction of the Committee on Open Government is limited to matters involving public access to government records, primarily under the Freedom of Information Law. As such, my comments will be restricted to that subject.

As you may be aware, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and §89(3) of that statute provides in part that an agency is not required to create or prepare a record in response to a request. Therefore, if the memorandum of your interest does not exist, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

Second, when an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

I point out that in Key v. Hynes [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search". However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when "the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made" [Thomas v. I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Reeves:

I have received your letter of August 30 concerning the propriety of a partial denial of access by the Department of Correctional Services to an employee manual.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all record of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more of the grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, three of the grounds for denial are relevant to an analysis of rights of access.

Specifically, §87(2)(g) states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

Mr. Steven Reeves

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different basis for denial is applicable. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. It would appear that the record sought would consist of instructions to staff that affect the public or an agency's policy. Therefore, I believe that it would be available, unless a different basis for denial could be asserted.

A second provision of potential significance is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

i. interfere with law enforcement investigations of judicial proceedings...

ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;

iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or

iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

Under the circumstances, most relevant is §87(2)(e)(iv). The leading decision concerning that provision is Fink v. Lefkowitz, which involved access to a manual prepared by a special prosecutor that investigated nursing homes, in which the Court of Appeals held that:

"The purpose of this exemption is obvious. Effective law enforcement demands that violators of the law not be apprised the nonroutine procedures by which an agency obtains its information (see Frankel v. Securities & Exch. Comm., 460 F2d 813, 817, cert den 409 US 889). However beneficial its thrust, the purpose of the Freedom of Information Law is not to enable persons to use agency records to frustrate pending or threatened investigations nor to use that information to construct a defense to impede a prosecution.

"To be distinguished from agency records compiled for law enforcement purposes which illustrate investigative techniques, are those which articulate the agency's understanding of the rules and regulations it is empowered to enforce. Records drafted by the body charged with enforcement of a statute which merely clarify procedural or substantive law must be disclosed. Such information in the hands of the public does not impede effective law enforcement. On the contrary, such knowledge actually encourages voluntary compliance with the law by detailing the standards with which a person is expected to comply, thus allowing him to conform his conduct to those requirements (see Stokes v. Brennan, 476 F2d 699, 702; Hawkes v. Internal Revenue Serv., 467 F2d 787, 794-795; Davis, Administrative Law [1970 Supp], section 3A, p 114).

"Indicative, but not necessarily dispositive of whether investigative techniques are nonroutine is whether disclosure of those procedures would give rise to a substantial likelihood that violators could evade detection by deliberately tailoring their conduct in anticipation of avenues of inquiry to be pursued by agency personnel (see Cox v. United States Dept. of Justice, 576 F2d 1302, 1307-1308; City of Concord v. Ambrose, 333 F Supp 958). It is no secret that numbers on a balance sheet can be made to do magical things by scrupulous nursing home operators the path that an audit is likely to take and alerting them to items to which investigators are instructed to pay particular attention, does not encourage observance of the law. Rather, release of such information actually countenances fraud by enabling miscreants to alter their books and activities to minimize the possibility of being brought to task for criminal activities. In such a case, the procedures contained in an administrative manual are, in a very real sense, compilations of investigative techniques exempt from disclosure. The Freedom of Information Law was not enacted to furnish the safecracker with the combination to the safe" (id. at 572-573).

In applying those criteria to specific portions of the manual, which was compiled for law enforcement purposes, the Court found that:

"Chapter V of the Special Prosecutor's Manual provides a graphic illustration of the confidential techniques used in a successful nursing home prosecution. None of those procedures are 'routine' in the sense of fingerprinting or ballistic tests (see Senate Report No. 93-1200, 93 Cong 2d Sess [1974]). Rather, they constitute detailed, specialized methods of conducting an investigation into the activities of a specialized industry in which voluntary compliance with the law has been less than exemplary.

"Disclosure of the techniques enumerated in those pages would enable an operator to tailor his activities in such a way as to significantly diminish the likelihood of a successful prosecution. The information detailed on pages 481 and 482 of the manual, on the other hand, is merely a recitation of the obvious: that auditors should pay particular attention to requests by nursing homes for Medicaid reimbursement rate increases based upon projected increase in cost. As this is simply a routine technique that would be used in any audit, there is no reason why these pages should not be disclosed" (id. at 573).

While I am unfamiliar with the record in question, it would appear that those portions which, if disclosed, would enable potential lawbreakers to evade detection could likely be withheld. It is noted that in another decision which dealt with a request for certain regulations of the State Police, the Court of Appeals found that some aspects of the regulations were non-routine, and that disclosure could "allow miscreants to tailor their activities to evade detection" [De Zimm v. Connelie, 64 NY 2d 860 (1985)]. Nevertheless, other portions of the record might be "routine" and might not if disclosed preclude employees from carrying out their duties effectively.

Lastly, the remaining ground for denial of possible relevance is §87(2)(f). That provision permits an agency to withhold records when disclosure "would endanger the life of safety of any person." To the extent that disclosure would endanger the life of safety of correction officers or others, it appears that §87(2)(f) would be applicable.

In sum, while some aspects of the record must be and apparently were disclosed, others, in my view, could justifiably have been withheld in accordance with the preceding commentary.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Vincent J. Fabbo

Dear Mr. Fabbo:

The following pertains to your request for records of the Town of Smithtown. Although I responded to you by preparing an advisory opinion addressed to you on October 13, you indicated by phone that the opinion did not deal with all of the records that you are attempting to obtain. Based on previous conversations, I assumed that your primary interest involved knowing the identity of a person who complained that you maintained an illegal apartment in your home, and I focused only on that issue. However, you indicated that you are interested in obtaining an opinion concerning the remainder of your request, which involves "copies of any report, memoranda, determination, recommendation, all records, disposition, findings, final report...with specific regard to case #97-01769."

In this regard, as indicated in the earlier correspondence with you, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. While I am unaware of the extent to which the records in question exist or their contents, it appears that three of the grounds for denial may be pertinent to an analysis of rights of access.

First, §87(2)(b) was cited in the earlier response a basis for withholding those portions of the records which if disclosed would identify the complainant. If others were interviewed, for example, during an investigation, I believe that personally identifying details concerning those individuals could also be withheld.

Second, reports, memoranda and similar documentation prepared by Town employees would constitute "intra-agency materials" that fall within the scope of §87(2)(g). That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;

- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Lastly, it is possible that §87(2)(e) may be pertinent. That provisions enables an agency to withhold records that:

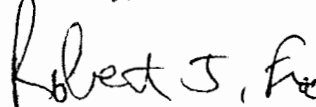

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

The ability to assert §87(2)(e) is dependent on the nature of the records and the effects of disclosure. Only to the extent that the harmful effects of disclosure delineated in subparagraphs (i) through (iv) would that exception be applicable.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Charleston:

I have received your letter of October 18 in which you requested various "information/documents" from this office.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not have possession or control of records generally. In short, I cannot provide the information that you requested because this office does not possess it.

A request for records should be made to the "records access officer" at the agency or agencies that you believe would maintain the records of your interest. The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests.

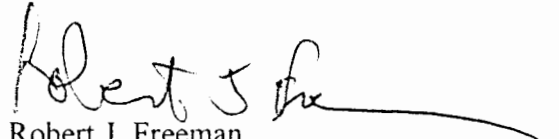

I note, too, that you sought information by asking a series of questions. Here I point out that the Freedom of Information Law deals with the obligation of government agencies to respond to requests for records; that statute does not require that agency staff provide information by answering questions. Further, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and §89(3) states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request.

Lastly, while the federal Freedom of Information Act, which applies to federal agencies, includes provisions concerning the waiver of fees, the New York equivalent includes no fee provisions. I note that it has been held that an agency may charge its established fees, if a request is made by an indigent inmate [see Whitehead v. Morgenthau, 552 NYS2d 5

Dear Mr. Horton:

I have received your letter of October 17 in which you requested from this office the Department of Correctional Services employee manual.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not have possession of records generally. In short, I cannot make the manual available because this office does not possess it.

In the future, it is suggested that you seek records from the agency that would clearly maintain them. I note that the regulations promulgated by the Department of Correctional Services indicate that a request for records kept at a facility should be made to the facility superintendent or his designee.

With respect to rights of access to the record in question, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all record of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more of the grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, three of the grounds for denial are relevant to an analysis of rights of access.

Specifically, §87(2)(g) states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or

iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different basis for denial is applicable. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. It would appear that the record sought would consist of instructions to staff that affect the public or an agency's policy. Therefore, I believe that it would be available, unless a different basis for denial could be asserted.

A second provision of potential significance is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations of judicial proceedings...
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

Under the circumstances, most relevant is §87(2)(e)(iv). The leading decision concerning that provision is Fink v. Lefkowitz, which involved access to a manual prepared by a special prosecutor that investigated nursing homes, in which the Court of Appeals held that:

"The purpose of this exemption is obvious. Effective law enforcement demands that violators of the law not be apprised the nonroutine procedures by which an agency obtains its information (see Frankel v. Securities & Exch. Comm., 460 F2d 813, 817, cert den 409 US 889). However beneficial its thrust, the purpose of the Freedom of Information Law is not to enable persons to use agency records to frustrate pending or threatened investigations nor to use that information to construct a defense to impede a prosecution.

"To be distinguished from agency records compiled for law enforcement purposes which illustrate investigative techniques, are those which articulate the agency's understanding of the rules and regulations it is empowered to enforce. Records drafted by the body charged with enforcement of a statute which merely clarify procedural or substantive law must be disclosed. Such information in the hands of the public does not impede effective law enforcement. On the contrary, such knowledge actually encourages voluntary compliance with the law by detailing the standards with which a person is expected to comply, thus allowing him to conform his conduct to those requirements (see Stokes v. "Indicative, but not necessarily dispositive of whether investigative techniques are nonroutine is whether disclosure of those procedures would give rise to a substantial likelihood that violators could evade detection by deliberately tailoring their conduct in anticipation of avenues of inquiry to be pursued by agency personnel (see Cox v. United States Dept. of Justice, 576 F2d 1302, 1307-1308; City of Concord v. Ambrose, 333 F Supp 958). It is no secret that numbers on a balance sheet can be made to do magical things by scrupulous nursing home operators the path that an audit is likely to take and alerting them to items to which investigators are instructed to pay particular attention, does not encourage observance of the law. Rather, release of such information actually countenances fraud by enabling miscreants to alter their books and activities to minimize the possibility of being brought to task for criminal activities. In such a case, the procedures contained in an administrative manual are, in a very real sense, compilations of investigative techniques exempt from disclosure. The Freedom of Information Law was not enacted to furnish the safecracker with the combination to the safe" (id. at 572-573).

In applying those criteria to specific portions of the manual, which was compiled for law enforcement purposes, the Court found that:

"Chapter V of the Special Prosecutor's Manual provides a graphic illustration of the confidential techniques used in a successful nursing home prosecution. None of those procedures are 'routine' in the sense of fingerprinting or ballistic tests (see Senate Report No. 93-1200, 93 Cong 2d Sess [1974]). Rather, they constitute detailed, specialized methods of conducting an investigation into the activities of a specialized industry in which voluntary compliance with the law has been less than exemplary.

Mr. Eric Horton

Lastly, the remaining ground for denial of possible relevance is §87(2)(f). That provision permits an agency to withhold records when disclosure "would endanger the life of safety of any person." To the extent that disclosure would endanger the life of safety of correction officers or others, it appears that §87(2)(f) would be applicable.

In sum, while some aspects of the record must be others, in my view, may justifiably be withheld in accordance with the preceding commentary.

Mr. Robert S. Thompson

Dear Mr. Thompson:

I have received your letter of September 7 concerning your efforts in obtaining information from Nassau County. As I understand the matter, you want breakdowns concerning challenges to assessments, appeals, the number of reductions in assessments and similar data.

From my perspective, the issue involves whether the County has the ability to generate the data of your interest based on its existing computer programs. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. Section 89(3) of that statute states in relevant part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request.

Second, §86(4) of the Freedom of Information Law defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

In view of the language quoted above, if information is maintained in some physical form, it would in my opinion constitute a "record" subject to rights of access conferred by the Law. Further, the definition of "record" includes specific reference to computer tapes and discs, and it was held soon after the enactment of the current version of the Freedom of Information Law that "[i]nformation is increasingly being stored in computers and access to such data should not be restricted merely because it is not in printed form" [Babigian v. Evans, 427 NYS 2d 688, 691 (1980); aff'd 97 AD 2d 992 (1983); see also, Szikszay v. Buelow, 436 NYS 2d 558 (1981)].

When information is maintained electronically, it has been advised that if the information sought is available under the Freedom of Information Law and may be retrieved by means of existing computer programs, an agency is required to disclose the information. In that kind of situation, the agency in my view would merely be retrieving data that it has the capacity to retrieve. Disclosure may be accomplished either by printing out the data on paper or perhaps by duplicating the data on another storage mechanism, such as a computer tape or disk.

On the other hand, if information sought can be retrieved from a computer or other storage medium only by means of new programming or the alteration of existing programs, those steps would, in my opinion, be the equivalent of creating a new record. Since §89(3) does not require an agency to create a record, I do not believe that an agency would be required to reprogram or develop new programs to retrieve information that would otherwise be available [see Guerrier v. Hernandez-Cuebas, 165 AD 2d 218 (1991)].

Lastly, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Assuming that the information of your interest can be generated by means of the County's existing computer programs, I believe that it would be available. In short, insofar as intra-agency materials consist of "statistical or factual tabulations or data", they must be disclosed pursuant to section 87(2)(g)(i), unless a different ground for denial applies. In my view, none of the grounds for denial would be applicable or pertinent.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

TO: Pamela Steigman [REDACTED]

FROM: Robert J. Freeman, Executive Director

RJF

Dear Ms. Steigman:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of September 7 concerning difficulties in your attempts to obtain records from the City of Tonawanda School District. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and that §89(3) of that statute states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, insofar as the records of your interest do not exist, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

Second, in a related vein, you referred to several specific reports and other records. It is possible that the reports were denied or that you were informed that they did not exist because the specific names that you accorded to the reports may be different from the names or titles used by the District. For instance, you requested the "Strategic Planning" report. While there may be a report dealing with the strategic planning, it may be characterized differently by the District. In the future, rather than seeking to identify a particular document of your interest, it is suggested that you provide information sufficient to "reasonably describe" the records sought as required by §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law. Under that standard, an applicant is not required to identify a record with particularity; he or she is merely required to provide sufficient detail to enable agency staff to locate the records sought. Similarly, you requested a "budget for Central School." I would conjecture that there is not a separate budget for each school within the District. It would likely be more effective to request the District's budget.

Ms. Pamela Steigman

Third, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests and appeals. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

When an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

I point out that in Key v. Hynes [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search". However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when "the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made" [Thomas v. Records Access Officer, 613 NYS 2d 929, 205 AD 2d 786 (1994)].

Lastly, you indicated that the District denied a request for a tape recording of a meeting because the tape is the personal property of the clerk of the Board. Assuming that the clerk used a tape recorder in the performance of his or her duties or used the tape recording as a means of ensuring the accuracy of minutes, I believe that the tape recording would be a District record that falls within the coverage of the Freedom of Information law. That statute pertains to agency records and defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

The Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, has construed the definition as broadly as its specific language suggests. The first such decision that dealt squarely with the scope of the term "record" involved documents pertaining to a lottery sponsored by a fire department. Although the agency contended that the documents did not pertain to the performance of its official duties, i.e., fighting fires, but rather to a "nongovernmental" activity, the Court rejected the claim of a "governmental versus nongovernmental dichotomy" [see Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581 (1980)] and found that the documents constituted "records" subject to rights of access granted by the Law. Moreover, the Court determined that:

"The statutory definition of 'record' makes nothing turn on the purpose for which it relates. This conclusion accords with the spirit as well as the letter of the statute. For not only are the expanding boundaries of governmental activity increasingly difficult to draw, but in perception, if not in actuality, there is bound to be considerable crossover between governmental and nongovernmental activities, especially where both are carried on by the same person or persons" (id.).

In another decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, the Court focused on an agency claim that it could "engage in unilateral prescreening of those documents which it deems to be outside of the scope of FOIL" and found that such activity "would be inconsistent with the process set forth in the statute" [Capital Newspapers v. Whalen, 69 NY 2d 246, 253 (1987)]. The Court determined that:

"...the procedure permitting an unreviewable prescreening of documents - which respondents urge us to engraft on the statute - could be used by an uncooperative and obdurate public official or agency to block an entirely legitimate request. There would be no way to prevent a custodian of records from removing a public record from FOIL's reach by simply labeling it 'purely private.' Such a construction, which would thwart the entire objective of FOIL by creating an easy means of avoiding compliance, should be rejected" (id., 254).

Further, in a case involving notes taken by the Secretary to the Board of Regents that he characterized as "personal" in conjunction with a contention that he took notes in part "as a private person making personal notes of observations...in the course of" meetings. In that decision, the court cited the definition of "record" and determined that the notes did not consist of personal property but rather were records subject to rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law [Warder v. Board of Regents, 410 NYS 2d 742, 743 (1978)].

In short, even if the clerk used a personal tape recorder or tape, based upon the preceding commentary, I believe that the tape recording is a District record that must be disclosed to the extent required by the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Harvey M. Elentuck

Dear Mr. Elentuck:

I have received your letter of September 2 in which you sought my views concerning several issues relating to the implementation of the Freedom of Information Law by Community School District 25.

First, you questioned the adequacy of the acknowledgement of the receipt of a request, which did not include any date indicating when you could expect that the request would be granted or denied.

In this regard, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in relevant part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

It has been held that agency officials "did not conform to the mandates" of the provision quoted above "when they did not...furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of...requests along with a statement of the approximate date when action would be taken" [Newton v. Police Department, 585 NYS2d 5, 8, 183 AD2d 621 (1992), emphasis added].

Next, you asked whether, in my view, a community school district should ensure that freedom of information requests be reviewed by an attorney. In my view, while the services of an attorney may be appropriately sought in some instances, there is not a need to seek guidance from an attorney in every instance in which a request is made under the Freedom of Information Law.

Mr. Harvey M. Elentuck

Lastly, you indicated that you have attempted to speak with the records access officer at Community School District 25 by phone on many occasions, but that she has always been unavailable. You have sought my views concerning her "perpetual unavailability and unresponsiveness." Not being aware of the records access officer's other duties, I cannot effectively comment. However, in some instances, individuals may be reacting to one's perpetual requests.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Snyder:

I have received your letter of September 2 in which you sought guidance concerning access to records maintained by the courts, police departments and offices of district attorneys.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to agency records and §86 (30) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86 (1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the foregoing, while a police department or the office of a district attorney is clearly an "agency" required to comply with the Freedom of Information law, the courts and court records are beyond the coverage of that law. This is not to suggest that court records may not be accessible; on the contrary, court records are generally available under other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255). When seeking court records, it is recommended that a request be made to clerk of the appropriate court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

As the Freedom of Information Law pertains to agencies, such as the office of a district attorney, it is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)9a) through (i) of the Law.

Since you also referred to the Personal Privacy Protection Law, I point out that that statute applies only to state agencies; it does not apply to the courts, local police departments or offices of district attorneys. Moreover, although §95(1) of the Personal Privacy Protection Law generally grants rights of access to records of a state agency to a person to whom the records pertain, §95(7) provides that rights of access conferred by that statute "shall not apply to public safety agency records". The phrase "public safety agency record" is defined by §92(8) to mean:

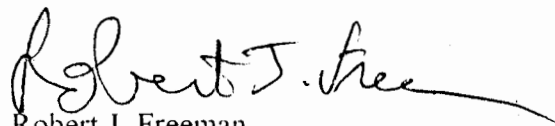

"a record of the commission of corrections, the temporary state commission of investigation, the department of correctional services, the division for youth, the division of probation or the division of state police or of any agency of component thereof whose primary function is the enforcement of civil or criminal statutes if such record pertains to investigation, law enforcement, confinement of persons in correctional facilities or supervision of persons pursuant to criminal conviction or court order, and any records maintained by the division of criminal justice services pursuant to sections eight hundred thirty-seven, eight hundred thirty seven-a, eight hundred thirty-seven-c, eight hundred thirty-eight, eight hundred thirty-nine, eight hundred forty-five, and eight hundred forty-five-a of the executive law."

Therefore, rights of access granted by the Personal Privacy Protection Law do not extend to records of agencies or units within agencies whose primary functions involve investigation, law enforcement or the confinement of persons in correctional facilities.

Enclosed for your review are "Your Right to Know", which deals with the Freedom of Information Law, and "You Should Know", which describes the Personal Privacy Protection Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Patterson:

I have received a copy of your request under the Freedom of Information Law for records maintained by a court clerk.

In this regard, for future reference, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law does not apply to the courts or court records. That statute pertains to agency records, and §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

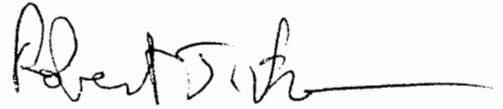

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the foregoing, the courts and court records are beyond the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law. This not to suggest that court records may not be accessible; on the contrary, court records are generally available under other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255). When seeking court records, it is recommended that a request be made to clerk of the appropriate court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

Dear Ms. Shell:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of September 8, as well as the materials attached to it. Please accept my apologies for the delay in response.

You have sought an advisory opinion concerning rights of access to certain records prepared by the New York State Department of Transportation (NYSDOT). Specifically, you wrote that:

“As part of NYSDOT’s job of building and maintaining the roadways of the State of New York, NYSDOT solicits bids for state highway projects from various subcontractors, including stone and gravel (course aggregate) producers. In connection therewith, NYSDOT requires that all course aggregate be supplied from NYSDOT-approved aggregate sources. In order to be ‘approved’ by NYSDOT, each supplier must submit a course aggregate sample to NYSDOT, which in turn performs a variety of tests to determine compliance with NYSDOT specifications. NYSDOT documents such test results on data sheets, an example of which is attached hereto.

“...the data sheets list the name and address of the supplier whose materials were tested, the materials actually tested, numerical test results in various performance categories, and an identification of the mineral composition of the sample tested. The data sheets list only factual and statistical information, no NYSDOT opinions or recommendations are included on these test result data sheets. Further, the test results consist of information compiled solely by NYSDOT. The course aggregate producers supply nothing to NYSDOT except for the material samples to be tested. The test results contain information not generated or supplied by any commercial enterprise, but rather contain data generated by NYSDOT through materials testing.”

You have asked whether the test reports are “exempt from disclosure” under §87(2)(d) of the Freedom of Information Law or accessible under that statute. From my perspective, the records must be disclosed. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The provision to which you referred, the so-called “trade secret” exception, enables an agency to withhold “records or portions thereof that...are trade secrets or are submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise or derived from information submitted by a commercial enterprise and which if disclosed would cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the subject enterprise...”

The term “record” is defined in §86(4) of the Freedom of Information Law to mean:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

In the context of your inquiry, a commercial enterprise has not submitted “records” to an agency, but rather raw materials used in the construction of highways. I note that it has been held that items of physical evidence, such as tools and clothing, do not constitute “records”, even though perusal of those items might produce information or knowledge [see Allen v. Strojnowski, 129 AD2d 700; motion for leave to appeal denied, 70 NY2d 871 (1989)]. Similarly, the tests prepared by NYSDOT are not derived from information consisting of records obtained from a commercial enterprise. In short, I do not believe that §87(2)(d) is applicable or that it may properly be asserted as a means of denying access to the records at issue.

Also pertinent is another ground for denial. However, due to its structure, that provision would, in my opinion, require disclosure in this instance. Specifically, §87(2)(g) permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;

Ms. Kimberly G. Shell
October 22, 1999
Page -3-

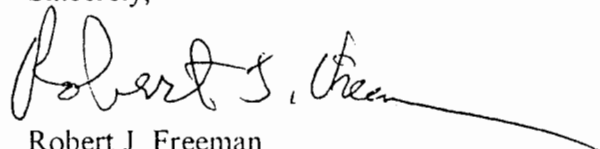

- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Based on the sample test sheet that you provided, its contents appear to consist solely of statistical or factual information. If that is so, the records would be available in their entirety.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman
Executive Director

Ms. Carolyn Schurr
General Counsel
Newsday
235 Pinelawn Road
Melville, NY 11747

Dear Ms. Schurr:

I have received your letter of September 3, as well as the documentation attached to it. In brief, Newsday reporter Joie Tyrell sought records from the Town of Babylon. Ms. Tyrell requested records pertaining to SOLAR International Trading Corp., Adam Barsky, and communications between the Town and New York City agencies, as well as the Office of the New York County District Attorney. The Town Attorney determined to disclose a number of pages, but only after redacting essentially the entirety of their contents; other than the name of a person to whom correspondence was addressed and a closing signature by the Town Attorney, or the tops of pages that identify documents as "Subpoena Duces Tecum", the contents of the records were fully deleted.

The Town Attorney wrote that the "collective basis" for the Town's denial of access involves §87(2)(e)(i) of the Freedom of Information Law, Criminal Procedure Law, §190.25(4)(a) and the Penal Law, §215.70. Section 87(2)(e) authorizes an agency to withhold records compiled for law enforcement purposes insofar as disclosure "would interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings." The provisions of the Criminal Procedure Law and the Penal Law cited by the Town Attorney refer to disclosure of information used or presented in grand jury proceedings.

From my perspective, based upon the language of the Freedom of Information Law and its judicial interpretation, the denial of access by the Town is overbroad. While there may be some elements of the records that might justifiably be withheld, I believe that others must be disclosed. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First and perhaps most importantly, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. It is emphasized that the introductory language of §87(2) refers to the authority to withhold "records or portions thereof" that fall within the scope of the exceptions that follow. In my view, the phrase quoted in the preceding sentence evidences a recognition on the part of the Legislature that a single record or report, for example, might include portions that are available under the statute, as well as portions that might justifiably be withheld. That being so, I believe that it also imposes an obligation on an agency to review records sought, in their entirety, to determine which portions, if any, might properly be withheld or deleted prior to disclosing the remainder.

The Court of Appeals reiterated its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law in 1996 in Gould v. NYC Police Department (89 NY2d 267), stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the Department contended that DD5's could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g), an exception separate from those cited in response to your requests. The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276), and stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, stating that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink vl. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

In the context of Ms. Tyrell's requests, rather than citing §87(2)(g) as a basis for a blanket denial of access to the records as in Gould, the Town has engaged in a blanket denial citing other provisions in a manner which, in my view, is equally inappropriate. I am not suggesting that the records sought must be disclosed in full. Rather, based on the direction given by the Court of Appeals in several decisions, the records must be reviewed by the Town for the purpose of identifying those portions of the records that might fall within the scope of one or more of the grounds for denial of access. As the Court stated later in the decision: "Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" (id., 277; emphasis added).

Second, to characterize all of the records at issue as having been compiled for law enforcement purposes, even though they may be used in or pertinent to an investigation, would be inconsistent with both the language and the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law. The Court of Appeals has held on several occasions that the exceptions to rights of access appearing in §87(2) "are to be narrowly construed to provide maximum access, and the agency seeking to prevent disclosure carries the burden of demonstrating that the requested material falls squarely within a FOIL exemption by articulating a particularized and specific justification for denying access" [Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562, 566 (1986); see also, M. Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health and Hospitals Corp., 62 NY 2d 75, 80 (1984); Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 NY 2d 567, 571 (1979)]. Based upon the thrust of those decisions, §87(2)(e) should be construed narrowly in order to foster access. Further, case law illustrates why §87(2)(e) should be construed narrowly, and why a broad construction of that provision would give rise to an anomalous result. Specifically, in King v. Dillon (Supreme Court, Nassau County, December 19, 1984), the District Attorney was engaged in an investigation of the petitioner, who had served as a village clerk. In conjunction with the investigation, the District Attorney obtained minutes of meetings of the village board of trustees "pursuant to a Grand Jury subpoena." Those minutes, which were prepared by the petitioner, were requested from the District Attorney. In granting access to the minutes, the decision indicated that "the party resisting disclosure has the burden of proof in establishing entitlement to the exemption," and the judge wrote that he:

"must note in the first instance that the records sought were not compiled for law enforcement purposes (P.O.L. 87[2]e). Minutes of Village Board meetings serve a different function... These were public records, ostensibly prepared by the petitioner, so there can be little question of the disclosure of confidential material."

Often records prepared in the ordinary course of business, some of which might already have been disclosed under the Freedom of Information Law, become relevant to or used in a law enforcement investigation or perhaps in litigation. In my view, when that occurs, the records would not be transformed into records compiled for law enforcement purposes. If they would have been available prior to their use in a law enforcement context, I believe that they would remain available, notwithstanding their use in that context for a purpose inconsistent with the reason for which they were prepared.

In my view, many of the kinds of records requested, by their nature, indicate that the exception concerning records "compiled for law enforcement purposes" is inapplicable. To contend that records prepared for purposes wholly unrelated to any law enforcement investigation may now be withheld due to their use in an investigation would, in my opinion, be unreasonable and subvert the purposes of the Freedom of Information Law. In support of this view, I again point to the decision rendered by the Court of Appeals in Capital Newspapers, supra. In its discussion of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law, the court found that the statute:

"affords all citizens the means to obtain information concerning the day-to-day functioning of the state and local government thus providing the electorate with sufficient information to 'make intelligent, informed choices with respect to both the direction and scope of governmental activities' and with an effective tool for exposing waste, negligence or abuse on the part of government officers" (id. at 566).

Contracts, vouchers and other materials regarding SOLAR, its contract with the Town and the termination of that contract clearly would have been prepared not for law enforcement purposes, but in the ordinary course of business. Similarly, my understanding is that Adam Barsky is a former Town employee. While various aspects of his personnel file might justifiably be withheld, personnel records typically are prepared in the ordinary course of business and not for any law enforcement purpose.

It is emphasized that there is nothing in the Freedom of Information Law that deals specifically with personnel records or personnel files. Further, the nature and content of so-called personnel files may differ from one agency to another, and from one employee to another. In any case, neither the characterization of documents as "personnel records" nor their placement in personnel files would necessarily render those documents "confidential" or deniable under the Freedom of Information Law (see Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980). On the contrary, the contents of those documents serve as the relevant factors in determining the extent to which they are available or deniable under the Freedom of Information Law. In most instances, two of the grounds for denial are pertinent in ascertaining rights of to personnel records.

Section 87(2)(b) permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". While the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public officers employees. It is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public officers and employees are required to be more accountable than others. With regard to records pertaining to public officers and employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a their official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975) (reprimands); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978) (payroll information and dates of employment); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980) (disciplinary action); Geneva

Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981 (a settlement reached following the initiation of disciplinary charges); Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988) (disciplinary action); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, supra (dates of employment, courses taken by teachers, etc.); Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986) (days and dates of sick leave)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977 (membership in a union); Seelig v. Sieloff, 201 AD2d 298 (1994) (social security numbers)].

The other ground for denial of significance, §87(2)(g), states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. Insofar as a request involves final agency determinations, I believe that those determinations must be disclosed, again, unless a different ground for denial could be asserted.

In terms of the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, in situations in which allegations or charges have resulted in the issuance of a written reprimand, disciplinary action, or findings that public employees have engaged in misconduct, records reflective of those kinds of determinations have been found to be available, including the names of those who are the subjects of disciplinary action [see Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); also Farrell, Geneva Printing, Scaccia and Sinicropi, supra].

In contrast, when allegations or charges of misconduct have not yet been determined or did not result in disciplinary action or a finding of misconduct, the records relating to such allegations may, in my view, be withheld, for disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Herald Company v. School District of City of Syracuse, 430 NYS 2d 460 (1980)].

Similarly, to the extent that charges are dismissed or allegations are found to be without merit, I believe that they may be withheld.

Communications between the Town and an office of a district attorney or other agency would constitute inter-agency materials. In addition, those kinds of records might have been compiled for law enforcement purposes. In that event, §87(2)(e) indicates that an agency may withhold those kinds of records insofar as disclosure would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

Lastly, it appears that various Town records have been forwarded to other agencies. If the Town continues to maintain copies of those records, it would be obliged to review those records for the purpose of determining rights of access. I note that when an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

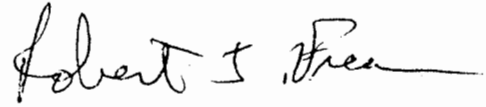

I point out that in Key v. Hynes [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search". However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when "the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made" [Thomas v. Records Access Officer, 613 NYS 2d 929, 205 AD 2d 786 (1994)].

A copy of this opinion will be forwarded to the Town Attorney.

Dear Ms. Levy:

I have received your letter of September 4, as well as the materials attached to it. You have sought clarification of the last sentence of a response to your appeal of August 18 to Thomas J. Rozinski, Counsel to the New York City Department of Parks & Recreation following a denial of a request under the Freedom of Information Law. Specifically, Mr. Rozinski wrote that "this is a final and binding agency decision."

From my perspective, that statement is intended to mean that there is no additional appeal to the Department and that the only means of reviewing or challenging the decision would involve the initiation of a judicial proceeding.

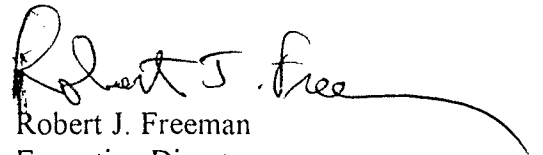

By way of additional background, when a request under the Freedom of Information Law is denied in whole or in part, the person denied access has the right to appeal to the head of the agency or a person designated by the head of the agency pursuant to §89(4)(a) of that statute. If the head of the agency or his or her designee affirms the denial of access, the person denied access would have exhausted his or her administrative remedies. At that juncture, the only remaining means of attempting to compel the agency to disclose following that "final and binding agency decision" would involve the initiation of a proceeding in Supreme Court under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules. As stated in §89(4)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law:

"...a person denied access to a record in an appeal determination under the provisions of paragraph (a) of this subdivision may bring a proceeding for review of such denial pursuant to article seventy-eight of the civil practice law and rules..."

FROM: Robert J. Freeman, Executive Director RJF

Dear Mrs. Counter:

As you are aware, I have received your correspondence concerning the propriety of a disclosure by a local police department of details concerning an incident involving your daughter.

In this regard, first, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to agency records. It is unclear on the basis of the materials whether the disclosure involved a record or comments given orally by the Chief of Police. If the comments were given orally, the Freedom of Information Law would not have been applicable.

When the Freedom of Information Law is applicable, that statute is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Under the circumstances that you described, it appears that §87(2)(e) would have enabled the Chief to withhold the information in question. That provision authorizes an agency to withhold records that:

“are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;

Ms. Carolee Counter
October 25, 1999
Page - 2 -

iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or

iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures;

From my perspective, it might be contended that disclosure could have "deprive[d] a person of a right to a fair trial..." If that is so, the information could have been withheld under §87(2)(e)(ii).

Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Freedom of Information Law is permissive; although it permits a government agency to withhold records in accordance with the grounds for denial, the state's highest court has held that it does not require that records be withheld when one or more of the grounds for denial applies [Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NYS2d 562, 567 (1986)]. Therefore, even if the information at issue could have been withheld under the Freedom of Information Law, there would have been no legal obligation to do so.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Arthur Springer

Dear Mr. Springer:

I have received your letter of September 6 in which you complained that the Department of Health failed to acknowledge the receipt of a request for records within the appropriate time.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

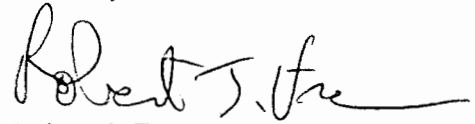

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Mr. Arthur Springer
Page - 2 -

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Moody:

I have received your letter of September 7 in which you complained that your request for information had not been answered as of the date of your letter to this office.

In this regard, first, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

For your information, the person designated by the Department of Correctional Services to determine appeals is Anthony J. Annucci, Counsel to the Department.

Second, if the information of your interest, the names and titles of two individuals who "took the measurements" of the site of an incident, is maintained in a record, I believe that it would be accessible. In brief, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, none of the grounds for denial would likely serve as a basis for a denial of access. If no such record exists, the Freedom of Information Law would not be applicable.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Green Haven Correctional Facility
Drawer B
Stormville, NY 12582

Dear Mr. Velez:

I have received your letter of September 7 in which you sought an opinion concerning your right to obtain certain "non-medical records" from your facility, specifically, an injury report pertaining to yourself and a "health services unit written memo...concerning photogrey lenses that is posted in the eye clinic."

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

It appears that both of the documents of your interest would fall within the scope of §87(2)(g), which, due to its structure, often requires the disclosure of substantial portions of records. That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

Mr. Jose Velez
October 27, 1999

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

I am unaware of the content of the injury report. If, however, it includes reference to persons other than yourself, §87(2)(b) may be pertinent. That provision permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." If, for example, the report contains medical or similar information relating to persons other than yourself, it is likely that those aspects of the record could be withheld.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Boyer:

I have received your letter of September 6 and the materials attached to it. You complained concerning delays by the Division of Parole in responding to a request under the Freedom of Information Law and contended that a "redacted" copy of a district's attorney recommendation to the Parole Board must be disclosed.

In this regard, first, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests and appeals. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Pertinent under the circumstances is §87(2)(g), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

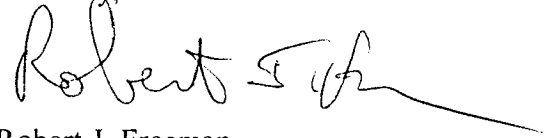

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. In short, insofar as the document in question consists of recommendations, advice, opinions and the like, I believe that it may be withheld.

Dear Mr. Walsh:

I have received your letter of September 8 in which you sought assistance concerning your unsuccessful requests for records maintained by the Marcy Correctional Facility.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests for records. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

For your information, the person designated by the Department of Correctional Services to determine appeals is Anthony J. Annucci, Counsel to the Department.

I point out that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records and that §89(3) of that statute indicates that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. If there is no record indicating the number of inmates who participated in the Temporary Release Program or had been approved to participate in that program, the Department would not be obliged to prepare a record containing that information on your behalf.

If records have been prepared containing the information sought, I believe that they would be accessible under §87(2)(g)(i) of the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Pagan:

I have received your undated letter in which you sought assistance concerning delays in response to your requests for records of the Bronx County District Attorney.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests for records. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

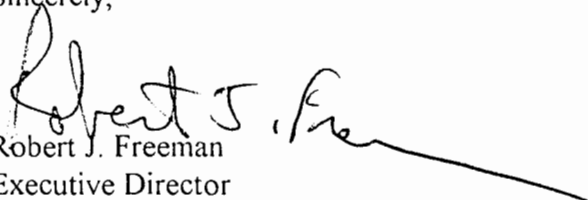

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Mr. Bryant Pagan
October 27, 1999

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Mr. Anthony M. Mosca

Dear Mr. Mosca:

I have received your note of September 9 in which you asked when this office is "going to do something about this intolerable situation." You attached a letter to the editor of the Journal News relating to the apparent failure of the Mount Vernon School District to comply with the Freedom of Information Law. That letter referred to an advisory opinion prepared on May 12 at the request of Mr. Ignazio Vito Cavalluzzi, and you indicated that the opinion and other documentation concerning compliance with the Freedom of Information Law have been "ignored" by the Superintendent.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government has the authority to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law; the Committee is not empowered to enforce that statute or compel an agency to grant or deny access to records. While the opinions rendered by the Committee are not binding, it is my hope that they are educational and persuasive and that they serve to encourage compliance with law.

In those instances in which an agency fails or refuses to comply, as suggested in the opinion sent to Mr. Cavalluzzi, a person denied access to records has the right to appeal the denial in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. To reiterate, that provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

It is also noted that a court may, in its discretion, award attorney's fees to a person who prevails in a judicial proceeding challenging a denial of access if certain conditions are met. Specifically, §89(4)(c) states that:

Mr. Anthony M. Mosca

October 27, 1999

“The court in such a proceeding may assess, against such agency involved, reasonable attorney’s fees and other litigation costs reasonably incurred by such person in any case under the provisions of this section in which such person has substantially prevailed, provided, that such attorney’s fees and litigation costs may be recovered only where the court finds that:

- i. the record involved was, in fact, of clearly significant interest to the general public; and
- ii. the agency lacked a reasonable basis in law for withholding the record.”

I regret that I cannot be of greater assistance.

Sincerely,

Ms. Ralene Adler

Dear Ms. Adler:

I have received your letter of September 9 in which you raised a series of questions concerning access to meetings and records of the Great Neck Library and its Board of Trustees. You indicated that the Library is a "free association library" and that, pursuant to its by-laws, the Library has determined to comply with the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, I offer the following comments in response to your questions.

First, having written to you on March 2, 1998, you are aware the board of trustees of a free association library is subject to the Open Meetings Law, even though it may be a not-for-profit corporation rather than a governmental entity. To reiterate, the Open Meetings Law, which is codified as Article 7 of the Public Officers Law, is applicable to boards of trustees of public and association libraries pursuant to §260-a of the Education Law, which states that:

"Every meeting, including a special district meeting, of a board of trustees of a public library system, cooperative library system, public library or free association library, including every committee meeting and subcommittee meeting of any such board of trustees in cities having a population of one million or more, shall be open to the general public. Such meetings shall be held in conformity with and in pursuance to the provisions of article seven of the public officers law. Provided, however, and notwithstanding the provisions of subdivision one of section ninety-nine of the public officers law, public notice of the time and place of a meeting scheduled at least two weeks prior thereto shall be given to the public and news media at least one week prior to such meeting."

Again, since Article 7 of the Public Officers Law is the Open Meetings Law, meetings of boards of trustees of various libraries, including association libraries, must be conducted in accordance with that statute in the same manner as public bodies subject to that statute.

Second, §102(1) of the Open Meetings Law defines the term "meeting" to mean "the official convening of a public body for the purpose of conducting public business". It is emphasized that the definition has been broadly interpreted by the courts. In a landmark decision rendered in 1978, the Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, found that any gathering of a quorum of a public body for the purpose of conducting public business is a "meeting" that must be convened open to the public, whether or not there is an intent to take action and regardless of the manner in which a gathering may be characterized [see Orange County Publications v. Council of the City of Newburgh, 60 AD 2d 409, aff'd 45 NY 2d 947 (1978)].

I point out that the decision rendered by the Court of Appeals was precipitated by contentions made by public bodies that so-called "work sessions" and similar gatherings held for the purpose of discussion, but without an intent to take action, fell outside the scope of the Open Meetings Law. In discussing the issue, the Appellate Division, whose determination was unanimously affirmed by the Court of Appeals, stated that:

"We believe that the Legislature intended to include more than the mere formal act of voting or the formal execution of an official document. Every step of the decision-making process, including the decision itself, is a necessary preliminary to formal action. Formal acts have always been matters of public record and the public has always been made aware of how its officials have voted on an issue. There would be no need for this law if this was all the Legislature intended. Obviously, every thought, as well as every affirmative act of a public official as it relates to and is within the scope of one's official duties is a matter of public concern. It is the entire decision-making process that the Legislature intended to affect by the enactment of this statute" (60 AD 2d 409, 415).

In short, based upon the direction given by the courts, if a majority of the public body, or a library board of trustees, gathers to conduct the business of the body, in their capacities as board members, any such gathering, in my opinion, would constitute a "meeting" subject to the Open Meetings Law. As you described them, the gatherings held by the trustees with the consultant would constitute "meetings" that fall within the coverage of the Open Meetings Law.

Third, meetings held in accordance with the Open Meetings Law are presumed to be open to the public. Only to the extent that an executive session may properly be held can the public be excluded from a meeting. I note that §102(3) of the Law defines the phrase "executive session" to mean a portion of an open meeting during which the public may be excluded, and that paragraphs (a) through (h) of §105(1) specify and limit the subjects that may appropriately be considered during an executive session. As such, a public body cannot conduct an executive session to discuss the subject of its choice.

With respect to notice, as indicated above, §260-a of the Education Law states in part that notice of the time and place of a meeting scheduled at least two weeks in advance must be given to the public and the news media at least one week before the meeting. With regard to meetings scheduled less than two weeks in advance, I believe that the Open Meetings Law would apply. Section 104 of that statute, which had been §99, provides that:

- "1. Public notice of the time and place of a meeting scheduled at least one week prior thereto shall be given to the news media and shall be conspicuously posted in one or more designated public locations at least seventy-two hours before each meeting.
2. Public notice of the time and place of every other meeting shall be given, to the extent practicable, to the news media and shall be conspicuously posted in one or more designated public locations at a reasonable time prior thereto.
3. The public notice provided for by this section shall not be construed to require publication as a legal notice."

Based on the foregoing, if a meeting is scheduled at least a week in advance but not more than two weeks in advance, notice of the time and place must be given to the news media and to the public by means of posting in one or more designated public locations, not less than seventy-two hours prior to the meeting. If a meeting is scheduled less than a week an advance, again, notice of the time and place must be given to the news media and posted in the same manner as described above, "to the extent practicable", at a reasonable time prior to the meeting. Therefore, if, for example, there is a need to convene quickly, the notice requirements can generally be met by telephoning the local news media and by posting notice in one or more designated locations.

Lastly, assuming that the Library acts as if it is an agency required to comply with the Freedom of Information Law, the materials to which you referred would be subject to rights of access. That statute pertains to agency records, and §86(4) defines the term "record" to include:

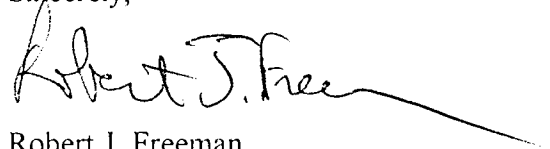

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based on the foregoing, information in any physical form kept or produced by or for the Library would constitute a record subject to rights of access. This is not to suggest that all such records would be accessible. In brief, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Mr. Rashaad Marria

Shawangunk Correctional Facility
Box 700
Wallkill, NY 12589-0700

Dear Mr. Marria:

I have received your letter of August 23. Please note that the Committee on Open Government has no regional office. The address appearing above is the only office of the Committee.

You have asked that this office "intervene" and "investigate" with respect to records pertaining to your case that you requested from the New York City Police Department and the Office of the Kings County District Attorney. In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law; the Committee is not empowered to "intervene" in the legal sense, nor does it have the ability or resources to "investigate." Nevertheless, having reviewed your request, I offer the following comments.

First, since you referred to a fee waiver under the "amended F.O.I.A.", I note that that provision pertains to records maintained by federal agencies and is not applicable in the context of your request. Further, the provision that is applicable, the New York Freedom of Information Law, makes no reference to fee waivers, and it has been held that an agency may charge its established fee, even when a request is made by an indigent inmate [see Whitehead v. Morgenthau, 552 NYS2d 518 (1990)].

Second, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of all of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your request, relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning "complaint follow up reports" prepared by police officers and police officers' memo books in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate.

The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;

- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87(2)(g)(i). Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

"However, the Police Department argues that any witness statements contained in the reports, in particular, are not 'factual' because there is no assurance of the statements' accuracy and reliability. We decline to read such a reliability requirement into the phrase 'factual data', as the dissent would have us do, and conclude that a witness statement constitutes factual data insofar as it embodies a factual account of the witness's observations. Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records, as well as others that you requested.

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

Lastly, in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available. However, in the same decision, it was also found that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

October 28, 1999

The Court in Moore also specified that an agency "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Ms. Rose Ann King

Dear Ms. King:

I have received your letter of September 13. You have sought an opinion concerning a request for records pertaining to the arrest of a named individual in Queens in 1973.

Having reviewed your request, the outcome of the arrest is not indicated, nor is your relationship to the matter or the person arrested. Nevertheless, in an effort to provide assistance, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. Since the event occurred in 1973, it is possible that many of the records relating to it no longer exist. To the extent that records have been destroyed or discarded, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

Second, to the extent that the records of your interest continue to exist, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of all of the records or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), would be relevant if the charges against the person arrested were dismissed. That provision pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." If the charges were dismissed in favor of the accused, the records would be sealed pursuant to §160.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law and, therefore, exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law.

If there was a conviction, insofar as the records continue to exist, of possible significance is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning "complaint follow up reports" prepared by police officers and police officers' memo books in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate.

The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...we note that one court has suggested that complaint follow-up reports are exempt from disclosure because they constitute nonfinal intra-agency material, irrespective of whether the information contained in the reports is 'factual data' (see, Matter of Scott v. Chief Medical Examiner, 179 AD2d 443, 444, supra citing Public Officers Law §87(2)(g)). However, under a plain reading of §87(2)(g), the exemption for intra-agency material does not apply as long as the material falls within any one of the provision's four enumerated exceptions. Thus, intra-agency documents that contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' are subject to FOIL disclosure, whether or not embodied in a final agency policy or determination (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosp. Corp., 62 NY2d 75, 83, supra; Matter of MacRae v. Dolce, 130 AD2d 577)..."

of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87[2][g][i]. Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department,

89 NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records, as well as others that you requested.

For instance, of potential importance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example, or if the records include personal or intimate details pertaining to the person arrested.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

Lastly, in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci,

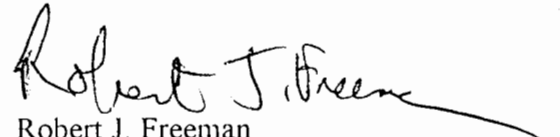

Ms. Rose Ann King
October 28, 1999

151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available.

In a related vein, again, if there was a conviction, a source of records pertaining to the matter would be the court in which the proceeding was conducted. While the courts are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law, court records are generally available (unless sealed) under other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Jerry Brixner

Dear Mr. Brixner:

I have received your letter of September 11 and the correspondence attached to it. In short, you have questioned the propriety of a denial of access by the Town of Chili to cellular phone bills involving the Town Supervisor. While the Town Clerk informed you that the amounts of the bills would be disclosed, she wrote that "actual copies with the phone calls made and numbers made during a specified month constitute an invasion of privacy."

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law, and the introductory language of §87(2) refers to the capacity to withhold "records or portions thereof" that fall within the scope of the grounds for denial that follow. In my opinion, the phrase quoted in the preceding sentence indicates that a single record may be both accessible or deniable in whole or in part. I believe that the quoted phrase also imposes an obligation on agency officials to review records sought, in their entirety, to determine which portions, if any, may justifiably be withheld.

In my view, two of the grounds for denial may be relevant to an analysis of rights of access to phone bills.

Section 87(2)(g) states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;

- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

If the bills are generated by the Town, I believe that they could be characterized as intra-agency materials. Nevertheless, in view of their content, they would apparently consist solely of statistical or factual information accessible under §87(2)(g)(i) unless another basis for denial applies. As such, §87(2)(g) would not, in my opinion, serve as a basis for denial. If the bills were generated by a telephone company, an entity outside of government that is not an agency, §87(2)(g) would not apply.

The other ground for denial of relevance is §87(2)(b), which permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

Although the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public employees. It is clear that public employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public employees are required to be more accountable than others. With regard to records pertaining to public employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a public employee's official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980); Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977].

When a public officer or employee uses a telephone in the course of his or her official duties, bills involving the use of the telephone would, in my opinion, be relevant to the performance of that person's official duties. On that basis, I do not believe that disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy with respect to an officer or employee serving as a government official.

Since phone bills often list the numbers called, the time and length of calls and the charges, it has been contended by some that disclosure of numbers called might result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, not with respect to a public employee who initiated the call, but rather with respect to the recipient of the call.

There is but one reported decision of which I am aware that deals with the issue. In Wilson v. Town of Islip, one of the categories of the records sought involved bills involving the use of cellular telephones. In that decision, it was found that:

"The petitioner requested that the respondents provide copies of the Town of Islip's cellular telephone bills for 1987, 1988 and 1989. The court correctly determined that the respondents complied with this request by producing the summary pages of the bills showing costs incurred on each of the cellular phones for the subject period. The petitioner never specifically requested any further or more detailed information with respect to the telephone bills. In view of the information disclosed in the summary pages, which indicated that the amounts were not excessive, it was fair and reasonable for the respondents to conclude that they were fully complying with the petitioner's request" [578 NYS 2d 642, 643, 179 AD 2d 763 (1992)].

The foregoing represents the entirety of the Court's decision regarding the matter; there is no additional analysis of the issue. I believe, however, that a more detailed analysis is required to deal adequately with the matter.

When phone numbers appear on a bill, those numbers do not necessarily indicate who in fact was called or who picked up the receiver in response to a call. In many instances, an indication of the phone number would disclose nothing regarding the nature of a conversation. Further, even though the numbers may be disclosed, nothing in the Freedom of Information Law would require an individual to indicate the nature of a conversation. In short, I believe that the holding in Wilson is conclusory in nature and lacks a substantial analysis of the issue.

This is not to suggest, however, that the numbers appearing on every phone bill must be disclosed in every instance. Exceptions to the general rule of disclosure might arise if, for example, a telephone is used to contact recipients of public assistance or persons seeking certain health services. It has been advised in the past that if a government employee contacts those classes of persons as part of the employee's primary ongoing and routine duties, there may be grounds for withholding phone numbers listed on a bill. For instance, disclosure of numbers called by a caseworker who phones applicants for or recipients of public assistance might identify those who were contacted. In my view, the numbers could likely be deleted in that circumstance to protect against an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy due to the status of those contacted. Similarly, if a law enforcement official phones informants, disclosure of the numbers might endanger an individual's life or safety, and the numbers might justifiably be deleted pursuant to §87(2)(f) of the Freedom of Information Law.

In the case of calls made by myself, a town supervisor or others in similar positions, phone calls are likely made to great variety of persons in a broad variety of contexts. Unlike the caseworker who routinely phones a class of persons having a particular status (i.e., recipients of public assistance), the calls made by the Supervisor may involve an assortment of issues and persons who do not fall within any special identifiable class or status. If that is so, disclosure of a phone number would not alone signify a personal detail involving the recipient of a call. Further, as suggested previously, disclosure of the number would not necessarily indicate who received the call, nor would it disclose anything about the nature of the call of a conversation.

In sum, subject to the unusual kinds of exceptions discussed earlier, it appears that phone bills should be disclosed under the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Richard J. Guertin
Corporation Counsel
City of Middletown
16 James Street
Middletown, NY 10940

Dear Mr. Guertin:

I have received your letter of September 14 and the materials attached to it. According to your letter, the City of Middletown "has signed an Agreement with a wholly owned subsidiary of BankAtlantic in Florida for the purchase in bulk of the City's delinquent tax liens and other liens." You indicated that the purchaser has asked that the Agreement "be considered exempt from disclosure under FOIL, because it would affect the Company's competitive position in the tax lien purchase market." In addition, paragraph 17 of the contract states that:

"Both parties to the Agreement shall keep confidential and not divulge to any third party, without the other party's prior written consent, the price paid by the purchaser for the Liens, or any other provisions of this Agreement, except when necessary in working with legal counsel, investors, auditor, taxing authorities or other governmental agencies, and as required by the New York Freedom of Information Law."

It is your view that §87(2)(d) of the Freedom of Information Law "would exempt the contract from disclosure." You have asked whether I concur with your position.

In this regard, I am unfamiliar with the area of commerce in which the signatory to the agreement is involved, the extent to which there is competition, or the effects of disclosure. Consequently, I cannot offer an opinion that deals specifically with the ability to withhold the contract in question. However, in an effort to offer guidance, I offer following comments.

First, as you are aware, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. It is emphasized that the introductory language of §87(2) refers to the authority to withhold "records or portions thereof" that fall within the scope of the exceptions that follow. In my view, the phrase quoted in the preceding sentence evidences a recognition on the part of the Legislature that a single record or report, for example, might include portions that are available under the statute, as well as portions that might justifiably be withheld. That being so, I believe that it also imposes an obligation on an agency to review records sought, in their entirety, to determine which portions, if any, might properly be withheld or deleted prior to disclosing the remainder.

Second, it has been held that an agreement, a promise or an assertion of confidentiality cannot be upheld, unless a statute specifically confers confidentiality. In Gannett News Service v. Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse Services [415 NYS 2d 780 (1979)], a state agency guaranteed confidentiality to school districts participating in a statistical survey concerning drug abuse. The court determined that the promise of confidentiality could not be sustained, and that the records were available, for none of the grounds for denial appearing in the Freedom of Information Law could justifiably be asserted. In a decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, it was held that a state agency's:

"long-standing promise of confidentiality to the intervenors is irrelevant to whether the requested documents fit within the Legislature's definition of 'record' under FOIL. The definition does not exclude or make any reference to information labeled as 'confidential' by the agency; confidentiality is relevant only when determining whether the record or a portion of it is exempt..."
[Washington Post v. Insurance Department, 61 NY 2d 557, 565 (1984)].

In short, I do not believe that a promise or agreement of confidentiality would serve to remove from public rights of access records that would otherwise be available.

Third, I concur with your contention that the only exception that would be pertinent is §87(2)(d). However, in my view, the extent to which it would serve as a valid basis for denial is questionable. That provision permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof that:

"are trade secrets or are submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise or derived from information obtained from a commercial enterprise and which if disclosed would cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the subject enterprise..."

In my opinion, the question under §87(2)(d) involves the extent, if any, to which disclosure would "cause substantial injury to the competitive position" of a commercial entity.

The concept and parameters of what might constitute a "trade secret" were discussed in Kewanee Oil Co. v. Bicron Corp., which was decided by the United States Supreme Court in 1973 (416 U.S. 470). Central to the issue was a definition of "trade secret" upon which reliance is often based. Specifically, the Court cited the Restatement of Torts, section 757, comment b (1939), which states that:

"[a] trade secret may consist of any formula, pattern, device or compilation of information which is used in one's business, and which gives him an opportunity to obtain an advantage over competitors who do not know or use it. It may be a formula for a chemical compound, a process of manufacturing, treating or preserving materials, a pattern for a machine or other device, or a list of customers" (id. at 474, 475).

In its review of the definition, the court stated that "[T]he subject of a trade secret must be secret, and must not be of public knowledge or of a general knowledge in the trade or business" (id.). The phrase "trade secret" is more extensively defined in 104 NY Jur 2d 234 to mean:

"...a formula, process, device or compilation of information used in one's business which confers a competitive advantage over those in similar businesses who do not know it or use it. A trade secret, like any other secret, is something known to only one or a few and kept from the general public, and not susceptible to general knowledge. Six factors are to be considered in determining whether a trade secret exists: (1) the extent to which the information is known outside the business; (2) the extent to which it is known by a business' employees and others involved in the business; (3) the extent of measures taken by a business to guard the secrecy of the information; (4) the value of the information to a business and to its competitors; (5) the amount of effort or money expended by a business in developing the information; and (6) the ease or difficulty with which the information could be properly acquired or duplicated by others. If there has been a voluntary disclosure by the plaintiff, or if the facts pertaining to the matter are a subject of general knowledge in the trade, then any property right has evaporated."

From my perspective, the nature of record, the area of commerce in which a commercial entity is involved and the presence of the conditions described above that must be found to characterize records as trade secrets would be the factors used to determine the extent to which disclosure would "cause substantial injury to the competitive position" of a commercial enterprise. Therefore, the proper assertion of §87(2)(d) would be dependent upon the facts and, again, the effect of disclosure upon the competitive position of the entity to which the records relate.

Relevant to the analysis is a decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, which, for the first time, considered the phrase "substantial competitive injury" [(Encore College Bookstores, Inc. v.

Auxiliary Service Corporation of the State University of New York at Farmingdale, 87 NY2d 410 (1995)]. In that decision, the Court reviewed the legislative history of the Freedom of Information Law as it pertains to §87(2)(d), and due to the analogous nature of equivalent exception in the federal Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. §552), it relied in part upon federal judicial precedent.

In its discussion of the issue, the Court stated that:

"FOIL fails to define substantial competitive injury. Nor has this Court previously interpreted the statutory phrase. FOIA, however, contains a similar exemption for 'commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential' (see, 5 USC § 552[b][4]). Commercial information, moreover, is 'confidential' if it would impair the government's ability to obtain necessary information in the future or cause 'substantial harm to the competitive position' of the person from whom the information was obtained...

"As established in Worthington Compressors v Costle (662 F2d 45, 51 [DC Cir]), whether 'substantial competitive harm' exists for purposes of FOIA's exemption for commercial information turns on the commercial value of the requested information to competitors and the cost of acquiring it through other means. Because the submitting business can suffer competitive harm only if the desired material has commercial value to its competitors, courts must consider how valuable the information will be to the competing business, as well as the resultant damage to the submitting enterprise. Where FOIA disclosure is the sole means by which competitors can obtain the requested information, the inquiry ends here.

"Where, however, the material is available from other sources at little or no cost, its disclosure is unlikely to cause competitive damage to the submitting commercial enterprise. On the other hand, as explained in Worthington:

Because competition in business turns on the relative costs and opportunities faced by members of the same industry, there is a potential windfall for competitors to whom valuable information is released under FOIA. If those competitors are charged only minimal FOIA retrieval costs for the information, rather than the considerable costs of private reproduction, they may be getting quite a bargain. Such bargains could easily have competitive consequences not contemplated as part of FOIA's principal aim of promoting openness in government (id., 419-420).

The Court also observed that the reasoning underlying these considerations is consistent with the policy behind §87(2)(d) to protect businesses from the deleterious consequences of disclosing confidential commercial information so as to further the state's economic development efforts and attract business to New York (id.). In applying those considerations to Encore's request, the Court concluded that the submitting enterprise was not required to establish actual competitive harm; rather, it was required, in the words of Gulf and Western Industries v. United States, 615 F.2d 527, 530 (D.C. Cir., 1979) to show "actual competition and the likelihood of substantial competitive injury" (id., at 421).

Lastly, the Court of Appeals most recently expressed its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY2d 267 (1996)], stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the Police Department contended that complaint follow up reports could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g), an exception separate from those cited in response to your request. The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276), and stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, stating that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink vl. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74;

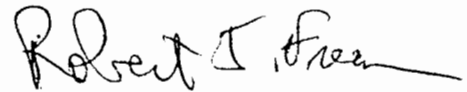

Mr. Richard J. Guertin
October 28, 1999

Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

Again, I am unaware of which portions of the documentation at issue would, if disclosed, cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the entity with which the City has contracted. However, it is clear in my opinion that some elements of the contract (i.e., paragraph 17 quoted earlier) would not fall within the coverage of §87(2)(d). It is suggested that you review the contract, perhaps with a representative of the entity, for the purpose of identifying those aspects of the documentation that you believe you could successfully withhold in view of the judicial decisions cited above and the burden of proof that must be met in the event of judicial review of a denial of access.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Ms. Tomlinson:

I have received a copy of your appeal under the Freedom of Information Law addressed to Dr. Rachel Bryant, who is associated with a professional corporation.

In an effort to enhance your understanding of the matter, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law would not be applicable in the circumstance described in your correspondence. That statute pertains to agency records, and §86(3) defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Based on the foregoing, the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to entities of state and local government; it does not apply to records of private entities, such as professional corporations, or to private practitioners.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, you may have a right to obtain the records of your interest under §33.16 of the Mental Hygiene Law, and it is suggested that you review that provision.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. H. Thompson
96-B-0910
Southport Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 2000
Pine City, NY 14871

Dear Mr. Thompson:

I have received your letter of September 13 in which you sought my opinion concerning your right to obtain certain records from the Department of Correctional Services relating to an incident in which you were accused of assaulting correction officers. The records in question involve an "unusual incident report" and copies of harassment grievances concerning seven correction officers.

In this regard, by way of background, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §50-a of the Civil Rights Law. In brief, that statute provides that personnel records of police and correction officers that are used to evaluate performance toward continued employment or promotion are confidential. The Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, in reviewing the legislative history leading to its enactment, has held that the exemption from disclosure conferred by §50-a of the Civil Rights Law "was designed to limit access to said personnel records by criminal defense counsel, who used the contents of the records, including unsubstantiated and irrelevant complaints against officers, to embarrass officers during cross-examination" [Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY2d 562, 568 (1986)]. In another decision which dealt with unsubstantiated complaints against correction officers, the Court of Appeals held that the purpose of §50-a "was to prevent the release of sensitive personnel records that could be used in litigation for purposes of harassing or embarrassing correction officers" [Prisoners' Legal Services v. NYS Department of Correctional Services, 73 NY 2d 26, 538 NYS 2d 190, 191 (1988)].

The Court in an opinion rendered earlier this year reiterated its view of §50-a, citing that decision and stating that:

“...we recognized that the decisive factor in determining whether an officer’s personnel record was exempted from FOIL disclosure under Civil Rights Law § 50-a was the potential use of the information contained therein, not the specific purpose of the particular individual requesting access, nor whether the request was actually made in contemplation of litigation.

‘Documents pertaining to misconduct or rules violations by corrections officers – which could well be used in various ways against the officers – are the very sort of record which  was intended to be kept confidential.  The legislative purpose underlying section 50-a  was  to protect the officers from the use of records  as a means for harassment and reprisals and for the purpose of cross-examination’ (73 NY2d, at 31 [emphasis supplied])” (Daily Gazette v. City of Schenectady, 93 NY2d 145, 156- 157 (1999)).

Based on the foregoing, the grievances appear to be exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law and properly withheld by the Department.

With respect to the unusual incident report, several grounds for denial may be relevant. That report would fall within the scope of §87(2)(g), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Also of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source, a witness, or others interviewed in an investigation.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

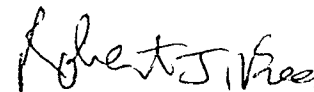

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub-paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman
Executive Director

Dear Mr. Bunker:

I have received your letter of September 12 in which you complained that requests for records of the Office of the Westchester County District Attorney had not been answered.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

Mr. Paul Bunker
October 29, 1999

explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Lastly, I note that you referred to requests for a variety of records, including DD5's. A "DD5" is a form used only by the New York City Police Department. As such, it is suggested that unless it is certain that an agency uses a particular form, you avoid using form names or titles and that, instead, you "reasonably describe" the records sought as required by §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Walsh:

I have received your letter of September 13. You have sought assistance concerning an unanswered request for information from a police department relating to your case.

First, having reviewed your request, it is addressed to an unnamed police department in Yaphank. It is suggested that a request specify the agency to receive it. On the basis of your letter, it is unclear whether you intended to contact the Suffolk County Police Department or a town or village police department.

Second, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and that §89(3) of that statute provides in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request for information. The same provision requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought in order that agency staff can locate and identify the records. Two aspects of your request involve the "Chain of custody of the Tapes" and "Sealing performed prior to inventory of the tapes." There is no indication of the nature of the tapes, and it is questionable whether the request "reasonably describes" the records. Further, I am unaware of whether law enforcement agencies prepare records that, in a particular form, specify the chain of custody or sealing of records. If no such records exist, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

Third, when a proper request is made, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that: reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. Mr. Harvey M. Elentuck

Dear Mr. Elentuck:

I have received your letter of September 12. You have questioned whether the time to be taken by Community School District 25 to respond to a request for records is appropriate.

In this regard, as you are aware, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

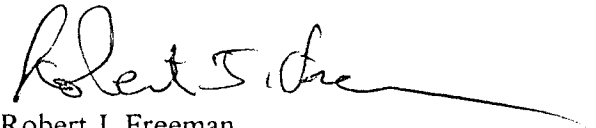

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

While an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Dear Mr. Green:

I have received your letter of September 12 in which you sought advice concerning a request made under the Freedom of Information Law to the New York City Police Department.

As I understand the matter, at the beginning of your first request, you made reference to an indictment number. In response, you were informed that the Department does not maintain its records in a manner that permits their retrieval through the use of an indictment number as an identifier. In the same response, it was suggested that you "provide additional information such as the date, time, precinct or arrest, number, and crime charged..." Nevertheless, at the end of that same request, you included your date of birth, social security number, the precinct in which the arrest was made, the street of the arrest, the charges and the date of the arrest.

In my view, it is unclear whether the recipient of the request read the entirety of that document, for with the information provided in addition to your name and indictment number, it appears that the request would have "reasonably described" the records as required by §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law. To meet that standard, an applicant must include sufficient detail to enable agency staff to locate and identify the records. In short, it appears that the response to your request may have been the result of an oversight. It is suggested that you might contact the records access officer and highlight the portions of the request that may be used to enable the Department to locate the records of your interest.

I note that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

Mr. Darrell R. Green

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

Alden, NY 14004-1187

Dear Mr. Butler:

I have received your letter of September 13 in which you raised questions concerning the ability to obtain records relating to grand jury and trial proceedings under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

As your inquiry concerns records relating to a grand jury, relevant is the first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), which pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". One such statute, §190.25(4) of the Criminal Procedure Law, deals with grand jury proceedings and provides in relevant part that:

"Grand jury proceedings are secret, and no grand juror, or other person specified in subdivision three of this section or section 215.70 of the penal law, may, except in the lawful discharge of his duties or upon written order of the court, disclose the nature or substance of any grand jury testimony, evidence, or any decision, result or other matter attending a grand jury proceeding."

As such, grand jury related records would be outside the scope of rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law. Any disclosure of those records would be based upon a court order or perhaps a vehicle authorizing or requiring disclosure that is separate and distinct from the Freedom of Information Law.

With respect to records used at a trial, in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available.

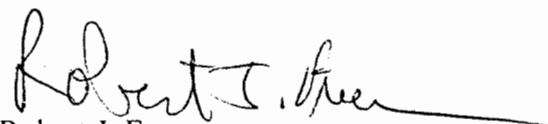

However, I point out that in the same decision, it was also found that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

The Court in Moore also specified that an agency "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Sonyea, NY 14556

Dear Mr. Todeschini:

I have received your letter of September 15 concerning a denial of access to records by the Division of State Police and your unsuccessful efforts in gaining access to court records under the Freedom of Information Law.

With respect to the former, based on a response by Lt. Col. Dutcher, your request had been answered previously, and he wrote that it would not be reconsidered. If I understand the matter accurately, your initial request was denied. If that was so, you would have had thirty days to appeal the denial pursuant to §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, and if the appeal was denied, four months from that determination to seek judicial review of the denial.

I note, too, that you referred to decisions from other jurisdictions which likely have no relevance to determining rights of access under the New York Freedom of Information Law. Similarly, you made reference to "dd5's". I believe that the dd5 is a form used solely by the New York City Police Department.

With regard to your request for court records, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and that §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Mr. David J. Todeschini
October 29, 1999

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

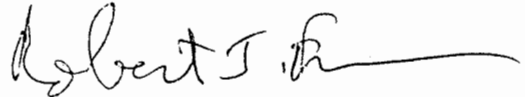

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court,
whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, 255) may grant broad public access to those records. Even though other statutes may deal with access to court records, the procedural provisions associated with the Freedom of Information Law (i.e., those involving the designation of a records access officer or the right to appeal a denial) would not ordinarily be applicable.

It is suggested that you resubmit your request to the clerk of the court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for your request.

I hope that foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Great Meadow Correctional Facility
Box 51
Comstock, NY 12821-0051

Dear Mr. Robles:

I have received your letter of September 14 in which you sought my views concerning several requests made under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, since many of the records that you requested were likely prepared in 1987, the extent to which they continue to exist is questionable. Insofar as the records of your interest no longer exist, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

With respect to criminal history records, the general repository of those records is the Division of Criminal Justice Services. While the subject of a criminal history record may obtain such record from the Division, it has been held that criminal history records maintained by that agency are exempted from public disclosure pursuant to §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law [Capital Newspapers v. Poklemba, Supreme Court, Albany County, April 6, 1989]. Nevertheless, if, for example, criminal conviction records were used in conjunction with a criminal proceeding by a district attorney, it has been held that the district attorney must disclose those records [see Thompson v. Weinstein, 150 AD 2d 782 (1989)].

It is noted that in a decision rendered by the Appellate Division, Second Department, the Court reconfirmed its position that criminal history records are, in general, exempt from disclosure (Woods v. Kings County District Attorney's Office, ___ AD 2d ___, NYLJ, December 31, 1996). In Woods, the Court upheld a denial of a request for the rap sheets "of numerous individuals who were not witnesses at [the petitioner's] trial." However, it distinguished its determination from the holding in Thompson, supra, in which it was found that a rap sheet must be disclosed when the request is "limited to the criminal convictions and any pending criminal actions against an individual called by the People as a witness in the petitioner's criminal trial." Therefore, insofar as your request involves records analogous to those found to be available in Thompson, I believe that the District Attorney would be required to disclose.

I point out that while records relating to convictions may be available from the courts or other sources, when charges are dismissed in favor of an accused, records relating to arrests that did not result in convictions are generally sealed pursuant to §160.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law.

Other requests involved records relating to "emergency activity", the investigation of a fire, photographs of the scene, and similar records. I note that I am unfamiliar with any previous requests or which records might have been disclosed or withheld. Of potential relevance to the matter is the decision rendered in Moore v. Santucci [151 AD 2d 677 (1989)], in which it was held that if records have been disclosed during a public proceeding, they are generally available under the Freedom of Information Law. In that decision, it was also found, however, that an agency need not make available records that had been previously disclosed to the applicant or that person's attorney, unless there is an allegation "in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence." In my view, if you can "in evidentiary form" demonstrate that neither you nor your attorney maintain records that had previously been disclosed, the agency would be required to respond to a request for the same records. I also point out, however, that the decision in Moore specified that the respondent office of a district attorney was "not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

Assuming that the records sought have not been previously disclosed, I believe several of the grounds for denial could be pertinent.

Section 87(2)(b) permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". From my perspective, the propriety of a denial of access would, under the circumstances, be dependent upon the nature of statements by witnesses or the contents of other records have already been disclosed. If disclosure of the records in question would not serve to infringe upon witnesses' privacy in view of prior disclosures, §87(2)(b) might not justifiably serve as a basis for denial. However, if the statements in question include substantially different information, that provision may be applicable.

Also potentially relevant is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in subparagraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Section 87(2)(f) permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would "endanger the life or safety of any person." Without knowledge of the facts and circumstances of your case, I could not conjecture as to the relevance of that provision.

Lastly, §87(2)(g) authorizes an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

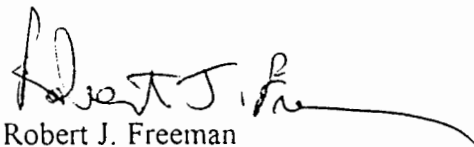

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Mr. William Sepe

Dear Mr. Sepe:

I have received your letter of September and the materials relating to it. You have made two requests to the City of Poughkeepsie under the Freedom of Information Law, neither of which was answered. Consequently, you asked whether you are "using" that statute "correctly."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency, such as a city, is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests for records, and requests should ordinarily be made to that person. In my view, the officials in receipt of your requests should have responded in a manner consistent with law or forwarded the requests to the records access officer.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

Mr. William Sepe
November 1, 1999

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

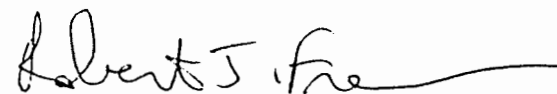

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Lastly, having reviewed your request to the City's Sanitation Supervisor, I believe that there are elements of the request that do not clearly involve records, but rather the making of judgments or interpretations of law that involve legal research. An agency subject to the Freedom of Information Law is required to disclose existing records that have been "reasonably described." The first aspect of your request involves "A copy of all City of Poughkeepsie Sanitation Department rules, regulations, ordinances, and laws concerning bushes, trees, grass, and other vegetation"; another involves provisions that "give the Sanitation Department the authority to enter private property against the owner's wishes to trim bushes." In both instances, judgments must be made as to which provisions of law might apply. Applicable laws might involve such areas as sanitation, health, environment, traffic, public safety, and perhaps other subjects. Further, reasonable people, as well as attorneys, often differ as to the meaning or applicability of laws and rules. In short, those kinds of requests are not, in my view, valid for the purposes of the Freedom of Information Law. Conversely, your request for a copy of "Section 9-10 of the Code of Ordinances of the City of Poughkeepsie" involves a particular record that is clearly described and would, in my opinion, be fully consistent with the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the Freedom of Information Law and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Ms. June Maxam
Box 408
Chestertown, NY 12817

Dear Ms. Maxam:

I have received your letter of September 16 and the materials attached to it. You have sought an opinion concerning "the availability of billing and payments of special district attorneys/attorneys appointed to individual matters." Although vouchers were disclosed, in many, the "case name (defendant), assignment date was blacked out showing only the amount charged but no indication what the amount was for." Similarly, you wrote that on the voucher you enclosed, "blacked out [are] all identifying factors and explanation of services rendered so there is no indication of what the services rendered are for the services charged."

Except as otherwise indicated, it appears that the portions "blacked out" should have been disclosed. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. It is emphasized that the introductory language of §87(2) refers to the authority to withhold "records or portions thereof" that fall within the scope of the exceptions that follow. In my view, the phrase quoted in the preceding sentence evidences a recognition on the part of the Legislature that a single record or report, for example, might include portions that are available under the statute, as well as portions that might justifiably be withheld. That being so, I believe that it also imposes an obligation on an agency to review records sought, in their entirety, to determine which portions, if any, might properly be withheld or deleted prior to disclosing the remainder.

Pertinent with respect to the records that you requested is a decision that involved a request for the amount of money paid in 1994 to a particular law firm for legal services rendered in representing a county in a landfill expansion suit, as well as "copies of invoices, bills, vouchers submitted to the county from the law firm justifying and itemizing the expenses for 1994" (Orange County Publications v. County of Orange, 637 NYS 2d 596, 599 (1995)]. Although monthly bills indicating amounts charged by the firm were disclosed, the agency redacted "the daily descriptions of the specific tasks' (the description material) 'including descriptions of issues researched, meetings and conversations between attorney and client'" (id.). The County offered several rationales for the redactions; nevertheless, the court rejected all of them, in some instances fully, in others in part.

The first contention was that the descriptive material is specifically exempted from disclosure by statute in conjunction with §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law and the assertion of the attorney-client privilege pursuant to §4503 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules (CPLR). The court found that the mere communication between the law firm and the County as its client does not necessarily involve a privileged communication; rather, the court stressed that it is the content of the communications that determine the extent to which the privilege applies. Further, the court distinguished between actual communications between attorney and client and descriptions of the legal services provided, stating that:

"Thus, respondent's position can be sustained only if such descriptions rise to the level of protected communications.

"In this regard, the Court recognizes that not all communications between attorney and client are privileged. Matter of Priest v. Hennessy, supra, 51 N.Y.2d 68, 69, 409 N.E.2d 983, 431, N.Y.S.2d 511. In particular, 'fee arrangements between attorney and client do not ordinarily constitute a confidential communication and, thus, are not privileged in the usual case' (Ibid.). Indeed, '[a] communication concerning the fee to be paid has no direct relevance to the legal advice to be given', but rather "[i]s a collateral matter which, unlike communications which relate to the subject matter of the attorney's professional employment, is not privileged' Matter of Priest v. Hennessy, supra, 51 N.Y.2d at 69, 409 N.E.2d 983, 431 N.Y.S.2d 511.

"Consequently, while billing statements which 'are detailed in showing services, conversations, and conferences between counsel and others' are protected by the attorney-client privilege (Licensing Corporation of America v. National Hockey League Players Association, 153 Misc.2d 126, 127-128, 580 N.Y.S.2d 128 [Sup. Ct. N.Y.Co. 1992]; see, De La Roche v. De La Roche, 209 A.D.2d 157, 158-159 [1st Dept. 1994]), no such privilege attaches to fee statements which do not provide 'detailed accounts' of the legal services provided by counsel..." (id., 602).

It was also contended that the records could be withheld on the ground that they constituted attorney work product or material prepared for litigation that are exempted from disclosure by statute [see CPLR, §3101(c) and (d)]. In dealing with that claim, it was stated by the court that:

"Respondent's denial of the FOIL request cannot be upheld unless the descriptive material is uniquely the product of the professional skills of respondent's outside counsel. The preparation and submission of a bill for fees due and owing, not at all dependent on legal expertise, education or training, cannot be 'attribute[d]...to the unique skills of an attorney' (Brandman v. Cross & Brown Co., 125 Misc.2d 185, 188 479 N.Y.S.2d 435 [Sup. Ct. Kings Ct. 1984]). Therefore, the attorney work product privilege does not serve as an absolute bar to disclosure of the descriptive material. (See, id.).

"Nevertheless, depending upon how much information is set forth in the descriptive material, a limited portion of that information may be protected from disclosure, either under the work product privilege, or the privilege for materials prepared for litigation, as codified in CPLR 3101(d)...

"While the Court has not been presented with any of the billing records sought, the Court understands that they may contain specific references to: legal issues researched, which bears upon the law firm's theories of the landfill action; conferences with witnesses not yet identified and interviewed by respondent's adversary in that lawsuit; and other legal services which were provided as part of counsel's representation of respondent in that ongoing legal action...Certainly, any such references to interviews, conversations or correspondence with particular individuals, prospective pleadings or motions, legal theories, or similar matters, may be protected either as work product or material prepared for litigation, or both" (emphasis added by the court) (id., 604).

Finally, it was contended that the records consisted of intra-agency materials that could be withheld under §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

The court found that much of the information would likely consist of factual information available under §87(2)(g)(i) and stated that:

"...the Court concludes that respondent has failed to establish that petitioner should be denied access to the descriptive material as a whole. While it is possible that some of the descriptive material may fall within the exempted category of expressions of opinion, respondent has failed to identify with any particularity those portions which are not subject to disclosure under Public Officers Law §87(2)(g). See, Matter of Dunlea v. Goldmark, supra, 54 A.D.2d 449, 389 N.Y.S.2d 423. Certainly, any information which merely reports an event or factual occurrence, such as a conference, telephone call, research, court appearance, or similar description of legal work, and which does not disclose opinions, recommendations or statements of legal strategy will not be barred from disclosure under this exemption. See, Ingram v. Axelrod, supra" (id., 605-606).

In short, although it was found that some aspects of the records in question might properly be withheld based on their specific contents, a blanket denial of access was clearly inconsistent with law, and substantial portions of the records were found to be accessible.

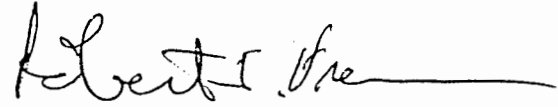

In the context of your request, I am unaware of the nature of the clients represented. However, because judicial proceedings are public, the identities of defendants and the nature of the proceedings may be known. The exception that may be applicable here involves the situation in which charges are dismissed in favor of an accused in which records pertaining the incident are generally sealed pursuant to §160.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law. In that event, I believe that a defendant's name could be deleted. However, in that and other circumstances, I believe that the remainder of the record, i.e., portions indicating the date, the nature of services rendered and the like, must, in accordance with the decisions cited earlier, be disclosed.

Lastly, it appears that the attorney's tax exempt number was deleted. In my view, that item could properly have been withheld on the ground that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" pursuant to §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law.

Mr. Christopher K. Philippo

Dear Mr. Philippo:

I have received your letter of September 19 in which you referred to a refusal by the Rensselaer County Department of Social Services to disclose your medical history to you pursuant to §373-a of the Social Services Law "on the basis that [you] had already received [your] medical history as part of the Non-Identifying Information Report [you] received from the New York State Adoption Information Registry." You have asked whether if you have requested a record once, you are not entitled to request it a second time.

From my perspective, if the County maintains the same record as that maintained in the Adoption Registry, you may not be entitled to seek it a second time. In Moore v. Santucci [151 AD 2d 677 (1989)] it was found that an agency need not make available records that had been previously disclosed to the applicant or that person's representative, unless there is an allegation "in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence." In my view, if you can "in evidentiary form" demonstrate that neither you nor your representative maintains records that had previously been disclosed, the agency would be required to respond to a request for the same records.

On the other hand, if the records maintained by the two entities are different, I believe that the County would be obliged to its records to the extent required by §373-a and the Freedom of Information Law [see Malowski v. D'Elia, 160 AD2d 798 (1990)]. In that event, a request should be made to the County's "records access officer." Pursuant to the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as records access officer, and he or she is required to coordinate an agency's response to requests. It is suggested that you contact the office of the County Executive to ascertain the identity of the records access officer.

Mr. Christopher K. Philippo

Lastly, as I understand the applicable statute, adoption records can be disclosed only pursuant to a court order. I point out that the first ground for denial of access to records in the Freedom of Information Law, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §114 of the Domestic Relations Law, which generally requires that adoption records be sealed and confidential. As such, the Freedom of Information Law would not be applicable to those records. Section 114 states in part that:

"No person, including the attorney for the adoptive parents shall disclose the surname of the child directly or indirectly to the adoptive parents except upon order of the court. No person shall be allowed access to such sealed records and order and any index thereof except upon an order of a judge or surrogate of the court in which the order was made or of a justice of the supreme court. No order for disclosure or access and inspection shall be granted except on good cause shown and on due notice to the adoptive parents and to such additional persons as the court may direct."

Based on the foregoing, only a court by means of an order could unseal records relating to an adoption.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman
Executive Director

Mr. Frederick H. Ahrens, Jr.
Steuben County Attorney
3 East Pulteney Square
Bath, NY 14810

Dear Mr. Ahrens:

I have received your letter of September 17. In short, you have asked whether you must disclose the home addresses of the County's employees to a public employee union.

From my perspective, the County has the ability to withhold the addresses. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Second, it has been advised that the disclosure of home addresses would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" [see §87(2)(b)]. While the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public officers employees. It is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public officers and employees are required to be more accountable than others. Further, with regard to records pertaining to public officers and employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a their official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138

AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980); Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977 regarding membership in a union; also Seelig v. Sielaff, 201 AD2d 298 (1994) regarding social security numbers]. In my view, a public employee's home address is largely irrelevant to the performance of his or her duties.

Although tangential to the matter, I point out that one of the few instances in which the Freedom of Information Law requires that an agency prepare a record involves payroll information. Specifically, §87 (3) (b) of the law states that each agency shall maintain:

“a record setting forth the name, public office address, title and salary of every officer or employee of the agency.”

It is noted that the analogous provision in the Freedom of Information Law as originally enacted [formerly Public Officers Law, §88 (1)(g) referred to a payroll record identifying employees by name and address. That provision did not indicate which address, home or public office address, should be disclosed. Having received questions and complaints regarding the disclosure of home addresses of public employees, the “payroll provision” was clarified by the Legislature in its repeal of the original statute and the enactment of the current Freedom of Information Law in 1977, which became effective on January 1, 1978. Again, the extant provision refers specifically to the “public office address”, rather than the “address”, as in the original statute.

Third, as you indicated, §89 (7) states that:

“Nothing in this article shall require the disclosure of the home address of an officer or employee, former officer or employee, or of a retiree of a public employees' retirement system; nor shall anything in this article require the disclosure of the name or home address of a beneficiary of a public employees' retirement system or of an applicant for appointment to public employment; provided however, that nothing in this subdivision shall limit or abridge the right of an employee organization, certified or recognized for any collective negotiating unit or an employer pursuant to article fourteen of the civil service law, to obtain the name or home address of an officer, employee or retiree of such employer, if such name or home address is otherwise available under this article.”

The language quoted above indicates in its initial clauses that the home addresses of present and former public employees need not be disclosed under the Freedom of Information Law. Further, although the last clause of the provision refers to rights of access to home addresses by an employee organization, the cited provision grants such rights “if such name or home address is otherwise available under this article.” Since I do not believe that there is a right to home addresses granted by "this article", it does not appear that a public employee union has the right to obtain home addresses of employees under the Freedom of Information Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

David M. Brockway, Esq.
Attorney for the Town of Baldwin
312 Lake Street
Elmira, NY 14901

Dear Mr. Brockway:

I have received your letter of September 24 in which you raised two issues concerning the obligation of the Baldwin Volunteer Fire Department to disclose certain records.

You asked whether the Baldwin Town Board may under the Freedom of Information Law obtain copies of "all receipts and expenditures of the Fire Dept. from a prior year..." From my perspective, the Town, or any person, would have the right to obtain those documents.

As you may be aware, the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and §86(3) of the Law defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

As such, the Freedom of Information Law generally pertains to records maintained by entities of state and local governments.

However, in Westchester-Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball [50 NYS 2d 575 (1980)], a case involving access to records relating to a lottery conducted by a volunteer fire company, the Court of Appeals, found that volunteer fire companies, despite their status as not-for-profit corporations, are "agencies" subject to the Freedom of Information Law. In so holding, the Court stated that:

"We begin by rejecting respondent's contention that, in applying the Freedom of Information Law, a distinction is to be made between a volunteer organization on which a local government relies for performance of an essential public service, as is true of the fire department here, and on the other hand, an organic arm of government, when that is the channel through which such services are delivered. Key is the Legislature's own unmistakably broad declaration that, '[a]s state and local government services increase and public problems become more sophisticated and complex and therefore harder to solve, and with the resultant increase in revenues and expenditures, it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' (emphasis added; Public Officers Law, §84).

"True, the Legislature, in separately delineating the powers and duties of volunteer fire departments, for example, has nowhere included an obligation comparable to that spelled out in the Freedom of Information statute (see Village Law, art 10; see, also, 39 NY Jur, Municipal Corporations, §§560-588). But, absent a provision exempting volunteer fire departments from the reach of article 6-and there is none-we attach no significance to the fact that these or other particular agencies, regular or volunteer, are not expressly included. For the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objections cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" (id. at 579).

Moreover, although it was contended that documents concerning the lottery were not subject to the Freedom of Information Law because they did not pertain to the performance of the company's fire fighting duties, the Court held that the documents constituted "records" subject to the Freedom of Information Law [see §86(4)].

More recently, another decision confirmed in an expansive manner that volunteer fire companies are required to comply with the Freedom of Information Law. That decision, S.W. Pitts Hose Company et al. v. Capital Newspapers (Supreme Court, Albany County, January 25, 1988), dealt with the issue in terms of government control over volunteer fire companies. In its analysis, the Court states that:

David M. Brockway, Esq.

November 2, 1999

"Section 1402 of the Not-for-Profit Corporation Law is directly applicable to the plaintiffs and pertains to how volunteer fire companies are organized. Section 1402(e) provides:

'...a fire corporation, hereafter incorporated under this section shall be under the control of the city, village, fire district or town authorities having by law, control over the prevention or extinguishment of fires therein. Such authorities may adopt rules and regulations for the government and control of such corporations.'

"These fire companies are formed by consent of the Colonie Town Board. The Town has control over the membership of the companies, as well as many other aspects of their structure, organization and operation (section 1402). The plaintiffs' contention that their relationship with the Town of Colonie is solely contractual is a mischaracterization. The municipality clearly has, by law, control over these volunteer organizations which reprovide a public function.

"It should be further noted that the Legislature, in enacting FOIL, intended that it apply in the broadest possible terms. '...[I]t is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' (Public Officers Law, section 84).

"This court recognizes the long, distinguished history of volunteer fire companies in New York State, and the vital services they provide to many municipalities. But not to be ignored is that their existence is inextricably linked to, dependent on, and under the control of the municipalities for which they provide an essential public service."

Based upon the foregoing, it is clear that volunteer fire companies are subject to the Freedom of Information Law.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in section 87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, the kinds of records to which you referred would be public, for none of the grounds for denial would apply.

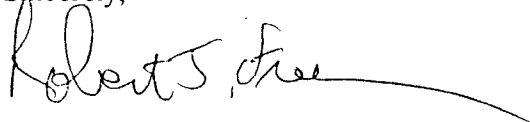

Next, you asked whether home addresses of the Department's volunteers and officers must be disclosed. While those persons are not public officers or employees, I note that §89(7) of the Freedom of Information Law specifies that the home addresses of present or former public officers or employees need not be disclosed. Since public employees have less privacy than others due to requirements that they be more accountable than others, I believe that home addresses of the Department's volunteers clearly may be withheld pursuant to §87(2)(b) on the ground that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

97-B-0597
Oneida Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 4580
Rome, NY 13442

Dear Mr. Neddo:

I have received your letter of September 19 in which you sought an advisory opinion. You wrote that your son attends the Head Start Program in Washington County and that you have attempted without success to obtain report cards, progress reports and similar records pertaining to your son. You have asked whether seeking the records under the Freedom of Information Law is appropriate.

In this regard, the Head Start Program is based upon federal legislation and is implemented locally. The entities that may implement the program can be diverse and may be local governments, churches, not-for-profit or other similar organizations. In the case of the Head Start Program in Washington County, I have been informed that it is implemented by the Washington County Community Action Agency.

From my perspective, it is not entirely clear that a community action agency is subject to the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. Nevertheless, it is clear in my view that a community action agency has an obligation to provide information to the public.

By way of background, the New York Freedom of Information Law pertains to agency records, and §86(3) of that statute defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office of other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Mr. James R. Neddo

As such, the Freedom of Information Law generally applies to records maintained by entities of state and local government. It is my understanding that community action agencies are not-for-profit corporations. Although it appears that they perform a governmental function, it is questionable whether they constitute "governmental entities" or, therefore, are agencies subject to the Freedom of Information Law.

It is my understanding, however, that community action agencies have been created by means of the authority conferred by the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964. According to §201 of the Act, the general purposes of a community action agency are:

"to stimulate a better focusing of all available local, State, private and Federal resources upon the goal of enabling low-income families, and low-income individuals of all ages, in rural and urban areas to attain the skills, knowledge, and motivations and secure the opportunities needed for them to become fully self-sufficient..." [§201(a)]

"to provide for basic education, health care, vocational training, and employment opportunities in rural America to enable the poor living in rural areas to remain in such areas and become self-sufficient therein..." [§201(b)].

When community action agencies are designated, §211 indicates that they perform a governmental function for the state or for one or more public corporations. It is noted that a public corporation includes a county, city, town, village, or school district, for example. As such, by means of the designation as community action agencies, those agencies apparently perform their duties for the state or at least one public corporation.

Perhaps most importantly, §213 of the enabling legislation expresses an intent to enhance public participation as well as disclosure of information regarding the functions and duties of community action agencies. Specifically, subdivision (a) of §213 states in relevant part that:

"[E]ach community action agency shall establish or adopt rules to carry out this section, which shall include rules to assure full staff accountability in matters governed by law, regulations, or agency policy. Each community action agency shall also provide for reasonable public access to information, including but not limited to public hearings at the request of appropriate community groups and reasonable public access to books and records of the agency or other agencies engaged in program activities or operations involving the use of authority or funds for which it is responsible..."

Again, while it is unclear that the Freedom of Information Law applies to records maintained by a community action agency, I believe that the federal legislation quoted above expresses an intent to ensure accountability to the public by providing "reasonable public access to books and records of the agency."

Whether the Freedom of Information Law applies or otherwise, I believe that it offers guidance concerning the disclosure. That statute, in brief, is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in section 87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

In my view, as the parent of a minor child, it would appear that you should enjoy rights of access to the records pertaining to your child.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Marvin Datz

Dear Mr. Datz:

I have received your letter of September 20 in which you raised questions concerning an "appeal form" sent to you by George Christian, Appeals Officer for the Department of Motor Vehicles, "as a guide." You also asked that I inform you of the views of Lieutenant Governor Donohue and Secretary of State Treadwell.

In this regard, first, the Lieutenant Governor is not the chair of the Committee on Open Government; the Committee currently has no chair. Further, as indicated above, the staff of the Committee is authorized to offer opinions and advice on behalf of its members.

Second, based on your comments, it appears that you misunderstand the process or have misinterpreted the matter. In general, the initial step in seeking records under the Freedom of Information Law involves directing a request to the agency's records access officer. That person has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests (see 21 NYCRR Part 1401). Once in receipt of the request, the agency has five business days to respond in a manner consistent with §89(3). If the request is denied in whole or in part, the person denied access has the right to appeal within thirty days of the denial pursuant to §89(4)(a). That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Mr. Marvin Datz
November 8, 1999

Third, the form that you enclosed is not, in my view, objectionable, and as Mr. Christian indicated, is merely a guide. In terms of the minimum requirements for appealing a denial of access, §1401. 7(e) of the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government states that:

“The time for deciding an appeal by the individual or body designated to hear appeals shall commence upon receipt of written appeal identifying:

- (1) the date and location of requests for records;
- (2) the records that were denied; and
- (3) the name and return address of the appellant.”

Lastly, I note that the form includes space for indicating the reason for appealing. In my opinion, to appeal, an applicant for records must merely have been denied access to the records sought or portions thereof. That person may but is not required to state the reasons for an appeal.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Dickens:

I have received your letter of September 20. You have sought an advisory opinion concerning a request for records relating to grand jury proceedings from the Office of the New York County District Attorney.

In this regard, the first ground for denial in the Freedom of Information Law, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". One such statute, §190.25(4) of the Criminal Procedure Law deals with grand jury proceedings and provides in relevant part that:

"Grand jury proceedings are secret, and no grand juror, or other person specified in subdivision three of this section or section 215.70 of the penal law, may, except in the lawful discharge of his duties or upon written order of the court, disclose the nature or substance of any grand jury testimony, evidence, or any decision, result or other matter attending a grand jury proceeding."

As such, records concerning grand jury proceedings are outside the scope of rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law. Any disclosure of those records would be based upon a court order or perhaps a vehicle authorizing or requiring disclosure that is separate and distinct from the Freedom of Information Law.

Ms. Concetta M. Boschwitz

Dear Ms. Boschwitz:

I have received your letters of September 23 and October 21. In short, in response to a request to the Shenendehowa Central School District for "information pertaining to comments by teachers regarding [your] performance evaluation", you were informed that the comments were destroyed, and that if they existed, you would not be able to see them. You have asked whether, in my view, the response is "correct."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. Consequently, if the records of your interest were destroyed, that statute would not be applicable.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law does not deal with the destruction of records. Relevant in my view is the "Local Government Records Law", Article 57-A of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law, which deals with the management, custody, retention and disposal of records by local governments. For purposes of those provisions, §57.17(4) of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law defines "record" to mean:

"...any book, paper, map, photograph, or other information-recording device, regardless of physical form or characteristic, that is made, produced, executed, or received by any local government or officer thereof pursuant to law or in connection with the transaction of public business. Record as used herein shall not be deemed to include library materials, extra copies of documents created only for convenience of reference, and stocks of publications."

With respect to the retention and disposal of records, §57.25 of the Arts and Cultural Affairs Law states in relevant part that:

"1. It shall be the responsibility of every local officer to maintain records to adequately document the transaction of public business and the services and programs for which such officer is responsible; to retain and have custody of such records for so long as the records are needed for the conduct of the business of the office; to adequately protect such records; to cooperate with the local government's records management officer on programs for the orderly and efficient management of records including identification and management of inactive records and identification and preservation of records of enduring value; to dispose of records in accordance with legal requirements; and to pass on to his successor records needed for the continuing conduct of business of the office...

2. No local officer shall destroy, sell or otherwise dispose of any public record without the consent of the commissioner of education. The commissioner of education shall, after consultation with other state agencies and with local government officers, determine the minimum length of time that records need to be retained. Such commissioner is authorized to develop, adopt by regulation, issue and distribute to local governments retention and disposal schedules establishing minimum retention periods..."

In view of the foregoing, records cannot be destroyed without the consent of the Commissioner of Education, and local officials cannot destroy or dispose of records until the minimum period for the retention of the records has been reached. I note that the provisions relating to the retention and disposal of records are carried out by a unit of the State Education Department, the State Archives and Records Administration. It is suggested that you might contact that agency in an effort to ascertain whether the records in question were properly destroyed.

Lastly, when an agency maintains records, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Pertinent in the circumstances that you described would be §87(2)(g), which states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;

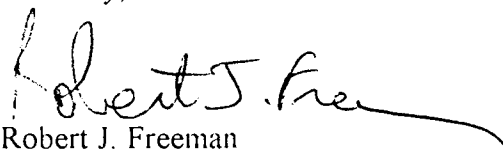

Ms. Concetta M. Boschwitz
November 5, 1999
Page -3-

- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. Therefore, insofar as the comments consisted of opinions of staff, for instance, a request for existing records in the nature of those of your interest could, in my view, be withheld.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Quinones:

I have received your letter of September 16 and the materials attached to it. Once again, you have sought assistance in obtaining records from your attorney under the Freedom of Information Law. You indicated that the attorney is employed by the Legal Aid Society in the Bronx.

In this regard, as indicated in previous correspondence, the statute within the advisory jurisdiction of the Committee on Open Government, the Freedom of Information Law, pertains to records maintained by agencies. Section 86(3) of the Freedom of Information Law defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Therefore, in general, the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to entities of state and local government.

It is my understanding that there are a variety of entities within New York that use the name "Legal Aid Society". Some are a part of the federal Legal Services Corporation, some may be private not-for profit corporations, and some may be parts of units of local government. While legal aid societies which are agencies of local government may be subject to the Freedom of Information Law, most are not "agencies" as that term is defined in the Freedom of Information Law and, as such, are not subject to that statute.

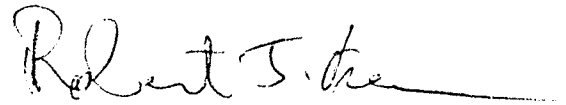

Mr. William Quinones
November 5, 1999

I am not fully familiar with the specific status of the Legal Aid Society in question. However, I believe that it is a corporate entity separate and distinct from government, that it is not an "agency" subject to the Freedom of Information Law and that, therefore, the records in which you are interested are outside the scope of the Freedom of Information Law.

As you requested, the materials attached to your letter are being returned to you.

I regret that I cannot be of greater assistance.

In this regard, in brief, §87(1)(b)(iii) of the Freedom of Information Law authorizes agencies to charge up to twenty-five cents per photocopy up to nine by fourteen inches, or the actual cost of reproducing other records (i.e., computer tapes and disks, etc.), "except when a different fee is otherwise prescribed by statute." The fee charged by the Division is based on a statute, §66-a(2) of the Public Officers Law, which provides that:

"Notwithstanding the provisions of section twenty-three hundred seven of the civil practice law and rules, the public officers law, or any other law to the contrary, the division of state police shall charge fees for the search and copy of accident reports and photographs. A search fee of fifteen dollars per accident report shall be charged, with no additional fee for a photocopy. An additional fee of fifteen dollars shall be charged for a certified copy of any accident report. A fee of twenty-five dollars per photograph or contact sheet shall be charged. The staff of the Committee on Open Government is authorized to issue advisory opinions. The ensuing staff advisory opinion is based solely upon the information presented in your correspondence.

Dear Mr. Webster:

I have received your letter of September 26 in which you assistance concerning unanswered requests for records.

In this regard, first, pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests, and requests should ordinarily be sent to that person. While I believe that the persons in receipt of your requests should have responded to you in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law or forwarded your requests to the appropriate persons, it is suggested that you might want to resubmit your requests to the records access officers of the agencies that failed to respond.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges

Mr. Timothy C. Webster

November 8, 1999

that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. Dear Mr. King:

I have received your undated letter in which you sought my opinion concerning a request made to the Legal Aid Society under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, the statute within the advisory jurisdiction of the Committee on Open Government, the Freedom of Information Law, pertains to records maintained by agencies. Section 86(3) of the Freedom of Information Law defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Therefore, in general, the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to entities of state and local government.

It is my understanding that there are a variety of entities within New York that use the name "Legal Aid Society". Some are a part of the federal Legal Services Corporation, some may be private not-for profit corporations, and some may be parts of units of local government. While legal aid societies which are agencies of local government may be subject to the Freedom of Information Law, most are not "agencies" as that term is defined in the Freedom of Information Law and, as such, are not subject to that statute.

I am not fully familiar with the specific status of the Legal Aid Society in question. The staff of the Committee on Open Government is authorized to issue advisory opinions. The ensuing staff advisory opinion is based solely upon the information presented in your correspondence.

Dear Mr. Nimmons:

I have received your letter of September 26 in which you asked for a copy of the employee manual used by the Department of Correctional Services or that I explain why portions of the manual are being withheld.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not have possession of records generally, such as the manual in which you are interested.

With respect to rights of access to the manual, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all record of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more of the grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, three of the grounds for denial are relevant to an analysis of rights of access.

Specifically, §87(2)(g) states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

Mr. Kevin Nimmons

November 8, 1999

Page - 2 -

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different basis for denial is applicable. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. It would appear that the record sought would consist of instructions to staff that affect the public or an agency's policy. Therefore, I believe that it would be available, unless a different basis for denial could be asserted.

A second provision of potential significance is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations of judicial proceedings...
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

Under the circumstances, most relevant is §87(2)(e)(iv). The leading decision concerning that provision is Fink v. Lefkowitz, which involved access to a manual prepared by a special prosecutor that investigated nursing homes, in which the Court of Appeals held that:

"The purpose of this exemption is obvious. Effective law enforcement demands that violators of the law not be apprised the nonroutine procedures by which an agency obtains its information (see Frankel v. Securities & Exch. Comm., 460 F2d 813, 817, cert den 409 US 889). However beneficial its thrust, the purpose of the Freedom of Information Law is not to enable persons to use agency records to frustrate pending or threatened investigations nor to use that information to construct a defense to impede a prosecution.

"To be distinguished from agency records compiled for law enforcement purposes which illustrate investigative techniques, are those which articulate the agency's understanding of the rules and regulations it is empowered to enforce. Records drafted by the body charged with enforcement of a statute which merely clarify procedural or substantive law must be disclosed. Such information in the hands of the public does not impede effective law enforcement. On the contrary, such knowledge actually encourages voluntary compliance with the law by detailing the standards with which a person is expected to comply, thus allowing him to conform his conduct to those requirements (see Stokes v. Brennan, 476 F2d 699, 702; Hawkes v. Internal Revenue Serv., 467 F2d 787, 794-795; Davis, Administrative Law [1970 Supp], section 3A, p 114).

"Indicative, but not necessarily dispositive of whether investigative techniques are nonroutine is whether disclosure of those procedures would give rise to a substantial likelihood that violators could evade detection by deliberately tailoring their conduct in anticipation of avenues of inquiry to be pursued by agency personnel (see Cox v. United States Dept. of Justice, 576 F2d 1302, 1307-1308; City of Concord v. Ambrose, 333 F Supp 958). It is no secret that numbers on a balance sheet can be made to do magical things by scrupulous nursing home operators the path that an audit is likely to take and alerting them to items to which investigators are instructed to pay particular attention, does not encourage observance of the law. Rather, release of such information actually countenances fraud by enabling miscreants to alter their books and activities to minimize the possibility of being brought to task for criminal activities. In such a case, the procedures contained in an administrative manual are, in a very real sense, compilations of investigative techniques exempt from disclosure. The Freedom of Information Law was not enacted to furnish the safecracker with the combination to the safe" (id. at 572-573).

In applying those criteria to specific portions of the manual, which was compiled for law enforcement purposes, the Court found that:

"Chapter V of the Special Prosecutor's Manual provides a graphic illustration of the confidential techniques used in a successful nursing home prosecution. None of those procedures are 'routine' in the sense of fingerprinting or ballistic tests (see Senate Report No. 93-1200, 93 Cong 2d Sess [1974]). Rather, they constitute detailed, specialized methods of conducting an investigation into the activities of a specialized industry in which voluntary compliance with the law has been less than exemplary.

"Disclosure of the techniques enumerated in those pages would enable an operator to tailor his activities in such a way as to significantly diminish the likelihood of a successful prosecution. The information detailed on pages 481 and 482 of the manual, on the other hand, is merely a recitation of the obvious: that auditors should pay particular attention to requests by nursing homes for Medicaid reimbursement rate increases based upon projected increase in cost. As this is simply a routine technique that would be used in any audit, there is no reason why these pages should not be disclosed" (id. at 573).

November 8, 1999

While I am unfamiliar with the record in question, it would appear that those portions which, if disclosed, would enable potential lawbreakers to evade detection could likely be withheld. It is noted that in another decision which dealt with a request for certain regulations of the State Police, the Court of Appeals found that some aspects of the regulations were non-routine, and that disclosure could "allow miscreants to tailor their activities to evade detection" [De Zimm v. Connelie, 64 NY 2d 860 (1985)]. Nevertheless, other portions of the records might be "routine" and might not if disclosed preclude employees from carrying out their duties effectively.

Lastly, the remaining ground for denial of possible relevance is §87(2)(f). That provision permits an agency to withhold records when disclosure "would endanger the life of safety of any person." To the extent that disclosure would endanger the life of safety of officers or others, it appears that §87(2)(f) would be applicable.

In sum, while some aspects of the manual might be deniable, others must in my opinion be disclosed in conjunction with the preceding commentary.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

The staff of the Committee on Open Government is authorized to issue advisory opinions. The ensuing staff advisory opinion is based solely upon the information presented in your correspondence.

Dear Mr. Williamson:

I have received your letter of September 27 in which you sought guidance in attempting to obtain a copy of a "Dr's script."

In this regard, it is unclear on the basis of your letter whether the prescription was filled at your facility or elsewhere, or whether the physician is associated with the facility.

In this regard, if the entity that maintains the prescription is a governmental entity, the Freedom of Information Law would be applicable. In terms of rights granted by that statute, it is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

With regard to medical records, the Freedom of Information Law, in my view, likely permits that some of those records may be withheld in whole or in part, depending upon their contents. For instance, medical records prepared by hospital personnel could be characterized as "intra-agency materials" that fall within the scope of §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law. To the extent that such materials consist of advice, opinion, recommendation and the like, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law would permit a denial.

Nevertheless, a different statute, §18 of the Public Health Law, generally grants rights of access to medical records to the subjects of the records. As such, that statute may provide greater access to medical records than the Freedom of Information Law. It is suggested that you send your request to the hospital and make specific reference to §18 of the Public Health Law when seeking medical records.

Mr. William J. Stoecker

Dear Mr. Stoecker:

I have received your letter of November 3 in which you sought "all relevant documents" concerning yourself or the Grabill Corporation covering the period of 1982 to the present.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions relating to public access to government records in New York, primarily under the state's Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not have possession or control of records generally, and it is not empowered to acquire records on behalf of individuals. However, in an effort to assist you, I offer the following comments.

First, the statute upon which you based your request, 5 USC §552, is the federal Freedom of Information Act, which applies only to records maintained by federal agencies. Again, the applicable statute in this instance is the New York Freedom of Information Law.

Second, requests for records should be directed to the "records access officer" at the agency or agencies that you believe would possess the records of your interest. The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests.

Third and perhaps most important, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. Consequently, a request should include sufficient detail to enable agency staff to locate and identify the records.

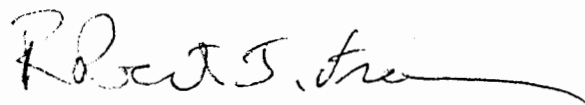

Lastly, although the federal Act contains provisions concerning the waiver of fees, its New York equivalent includes no such provisions. However, as a general matter, agencies subject to the New York Freedom of Information Law may charge a maximum of twenty-five cents per photocopy and may not charge for search, personnel time or other administrative costs.

Enclosed for your review is "Your Right to Know", which describes open government laws in New York

Mr. Norman Roth
President
University Hill Realty Ltd.
500 Westcott Street
Syracuse, NY 13210

Dear Mr. Roth:

I have received your letter of October 4, as well as the materials relating to it.

By way of background, in November of 1997, Ms. Kathryn L. Hudson sought records that were communicated between you and the Syracuse Housing Authority from the Authority "pertaining to Section 8 subsidy agreements" as they related to certain properties. In response to the request, the Authority "released a file of approximately one hundred twenty (120) pages" that included a "lawyer-client" confidential letter that was "privileged". You wrote further that Ms. Hudson "gave, loaned, or shared" the file with a third party who in turn "shared this package" with you and the Syracuse Newspapers. The Authority's attorney asked the third party to return the confidential letter and all copies of that document, and you have questioned the "legal status of this letter" and whether you can use it in a court of law as evidence.

From my perspective, first, once copies of records are disclosed in response to a request made under the Freedom of Information Law, the recipient essentially owns the copies and may do with them as he or she sees fit. The intended use of records is irrelevant, and the Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, has held that:

"FOIL does not require that the party requesting records make any showing of need, good faith or legitimate purpose; while its purpose may be to shed light on government decision-making, its ambit is not confined to records actually used in the decision-making process. (Matter of Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581.) Full disclosure by public agencies is, under FOIL, a public right and in the public interest, irrespective of the status or need of the person making the request” [Farbman v. New York City Health and Hospitals Corporation, 62 NY 2d 75, 80 (1984)].

In a somewhat related vein, it has been held that tape recordings of open meetings held by public bodies are accessible under the Freedom of Information Law (see Zaleski v. Hicksville Union Free School District, Supreme Court, Nassau County, NYLJ, December 27, 1978) and that any person may tape record those meetings in a manner that is not disruptive, even though “recordings can be edited, altered, or used out of context” [see Mitchell v. Garden City Union Free School District, 113 AD2d 924, 925 (1985)]. In Mitchell, the Court also stated that “[o]nce the information and comments are conveyed to the public, it should be of no consequence that they may subsequently be repeated, by means of replay, to those who were unable to attend” (id.). Based on the foregoing, once a person has received a record from an agency, he or she may display or reproduce it in a manner that is beyond the control of the agency.

Second, one of the grounds for withholding records under the Freedom of Information Law, §87 (2)(a), pertains to records that are “specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute.” For more than a century, the courts have found that legal advice given by a municipal attorney to his or her clients, municipal officials, is privileged when it is prepared in conjunction with an attorney-client relationship [see e.g., People ex rel. Updyke v. Gilon, 9 NYS 243, 244 (1889); Pennock v. Lane, 231 NYS 2d 897, 898 (1962); Bernkrant v. City Rent and Rehabilitation Administration, 242 NYS 2d 752 (1963) aff’d 17 App. Div. 2d 392]. As such, I believe that a municipal attorney may engage in a privileged relationship with his client and that records prepared in conjunction with an attorney-client relationship are considered privileged under §4503 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules. Further, since the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law, it has been found that records may be withheld when the privilege can appropriately be asserted when the attorney-client privilege is read in conjunction with §87(2)(a) of the Law [see e.g., Mid Boro Medical Group v. New York City Department of Finance, Sup. Ct., Bronx Cty., NYLJ, December 7, 1979; Steele v. NYS Department of Health, 464 NY 2d 925 (1983)].

In a discussion of the parameters of the attorney-client relationship and the conditions precedent to its initiation, it has been held that:

“In general, ‘privilege applies only if (1) the asserted holder of the privilege is or sought to become a client;(2) the person to whom the communication was made (a) is a member of the bar of a court, or his subordinate and (b) in connection with this communication relates to a fact of which the attorney was informed (a) by his client (b) without the presence of strangers (c) for the purpose of securing primarily either (i) an opinion on law or (ii) legal services (iii) assistance in some legal proceeding, and not (d) for the purpose of committing a crime or tort; and (4) the privilege has been (a) claimed and (b) not waived by the client” [People v. Belge, 59 AD 2d 307, 399 NYS 2d 539, 540 (1977)].”

Mr. William Roth
November 9, 1999

In my view, by disclosing the record in response to a request made under the Freedom of Information Law, the Authority, the client, waived the privilege.

In short, under the circumstances that you described, any copies of the letter in possession of members of the public are, in my opinion, their property, and I do not believe that they would be obliged to return them.

I cannot answer as to whether the document may be used as evidence, for that issue is unrelated to the Freedom of Information Law and, therefore, is beyond the jurisdiction of this office.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Garland Osiris

Dear Mr. Osiris:

As you are aware, your letter of September 29 addressed to Attorney General Spitzer has been forwarded to the Committee on Open Government. The Committee, a unit of the Department of State, is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law.

You indicated that you made a request under that statute on August 17 to the New York City Department of Citywide Administrative Services. Although you made reference to the request being attached to your letter, no such document was included among the materials sent to this office. Nevertheless, in an effort to assist you, I offer the following comments.

First, pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Committee (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests, and requests should ordinarily be made to that person. If you did not send your request to the records access officer, the person in receipt of the request, in my view, should have responded in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law or forwarded the request to the appropriate person. It is suggested, however, that you attempt to contact the records access officer to ascertain the status of your request.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Third, while I am unfamiliar with your request, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

I would conjecture that two of the grounds for denial would be pertinent to your request. One of them, however, often requires substantial disclosure. Section 87(2)(g) permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

November 10, 1999

The other provision of possible significance, §87(2)(h), authorizes an agency to withhold examination questions and answers to the extent that the questions will be given in the future.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Ms. Heather Struck

Dear Ms. Struck:

I have received your letter of September 30, as well as the materials attached to it. You have sought an opinion concerning rights of access under the Freedom of Information Law or the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act ("FERPA") to "the records of the New York State School Music Association ("NYSSMA") containing All-State Evaluations and Proficiency List rankings..." You wrote that neither the "All-State Recommendations" nor the "proficiency lists" are made available to parents or students.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and §86(3) of that statute defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Based on the foregoing, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law includes entities of state and local government within its coverage. NYSSMA, according to the materials that you forwarded, as well as telephone conversations with John Krestic, its 2nd Vice President, and Jerome Ehrlich, its counsel, is a private, not-for-profit corporation. It does not serve public schools exclusively, for its members include both public and private schools. In short, I do not believe that it is an "agency" that falls within the framework of the Freedom of Information Law.

November 10, 1999

Second, a school district, a governmental entity, is clearly an "agency" subject to the requirements of that statute. Again, that law pertains to agency records, and §86(4) defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

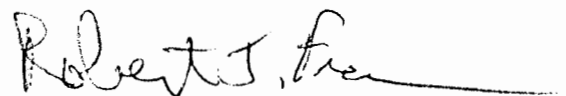

In view of the definition, an agency record includes not only materials kept by a school district, for example, but also materials kept for a school district. The question, therefore, is whether the materials in which you are interested are kept by NYSSMA for a school district. If they are, I believe that they would constitute "agency records" for purposes of the Freedom of Information Law and "education records" accessible to parents of students pursuant to FERPA and the regulations promulgated thereunder by the U.S. Department of Education (34 CFR §99.3).

Having discussed the matter at some length with Mr. Krestic, he indicated that the records NYSSMA prepares are prepared for its own purposes and that they are never agency records, even though some records or portions of records are transmitted to students and teachers. With respect to the form in which you are interested, he indicated that the top portion consisting of an adjudicator's comments and evaluation of a student's performance is given to the student and his or her teacher. Mr. Krestic specified, however, that the bottom portion of the form ("All-State Recommendation") represents an additional step in considering a student and is used internally by NYSSMA in combination with a "proficiency list", the latter of which was characterized as confidential and is not disclosed to either a student or any school official or teacher. If that is so, the records at issue would not be kept or held for an agency; rather, as I understand the matter, they are used internally by and for NYSSMA alone.

If my interpretation of the matter is accurate, the records of your interest would not be agency records or education records and would fall beyond the scope of both the Freedom of Information Law and FERPA.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. John Fitzgerald

Dear Mr. Fitzgerald:

I have received your letter of October 5 in which you raised questions concerning a denial of access to certain records by the Valhalla Union Free School District. In short, you requested and received copies of invoices for legal services paid by the District, but the "bills came with every detail line blacked out." You wrote that "[o]nly the legal letterhead and the amounts are shown." The remainder of the content of the records was withheld based on the attorney-client privilege.

From my perspective, based on the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, it is likely that substantial portions of the records that were withheld should have been disclosed. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

By way of background, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. It is emphasized that the introductory language of §87(2) refers to the authority to withhold "records or portions thereof" that fall within the scope of the exceptions that follow. In my view, the phrase quoted in the preceding sentence evidences a recognition on the part of the Legislature that a single record or report, for example, might include portions that are available under the statute, as well as portions that might justifiably be withheld. That being so, I believe that it also imposes an obligation on an agency to review records sought, in their entirety, to determine which portions, if any, might properly be withheld or deleted prior to disclosing the remainder.

The Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, expressed its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law most recently in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY 2d 267 (1996)], stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the agency contended that complaint follow up reports, also known as "DDS's", could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g). The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276). The Court then stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, directing that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

Pertinent with respect to the records that you requested is a decision, Orange County Publications v. County of Orange [637 NYS2d 596 (1995)], that involved a request for the amount of money paid in 1994 to a particular law firm for legal services rendered in representing the County in a landfill expansion suit, as well as "copies of invoices, bills, vouchers submitted to the county from the law firm justifying and itemizing the expenses for 1994" (id., 599). Although monthly bills indicating amounts charged by the firm were disclosed, the agency redacted "'the daily descriptions of the specific tasks' (the description material) 'including descriptions of issues researched, meetings and conversations between attorney and client'" (id.). The County offered several rationales for the redactions; nevertheless, the court rejected all of them, in some instances fully, in others in part.

The first contention was that the descriptive material is specifically exempted from disclosure by statute in conjunction with §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law and the assertion of the attorney-client privilege pursuant to §4503 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules (CPLR). The court found that the mere communication between the law firm and the County as its client does not necessarily involve a privileged communication; rather, the court stressed that it is the content of the communications that determine the extent to which the privilege applies. Further, the court distinguished between actual communications between attorney and client and descriptions of the legal services provided, stating that:

"Thus, respondent's position can be sustained only if such descriptions rise to the level of protected communications.

"In this regard, the Court recognizes that not all communications between attorney and client are privileged. Matter of Priest v. Hennessy, supra, 51 N.Y.2d 68, 69, 409 N.E.2d 983, 431, N.Y.S.2d 511. In particular, 'fee arrangements between attorney and client do not ordinarily constitute a confidential communication and, thus, are not privileged in the usual case' (Ibid.). Indeed, '[a] communication concerning the fee to be paid has no direct relevance to the legal advice to be given', but rather "[i]s a collateral matter which, unlike communications which relate to the subject matter of the attorney's professional employment, is not privileged' Matter of Priest v. Hennessy, supra, 51 N.Y.2d at 69, 409 N.E.2d 983, 431 N.Y.S.2d 511.

"Consequently, while billing statements which 'are detailed in showing services, conversations, and conferences between counsel and others' are protected by the attorney-client privilege (Licensing Corporation of America v. National Hockey League Players Association, 153 Misc.2d 126, 127-128, 580 N.Y.S.2d 128 [Sup. Ct. N.Y.Co. 1992]; see, De La Roche v. De La Roche, 209 A.D.2d 157, 158-159 [1st Dept. 1994]), no such privilege attaches to fee statements which do not provide 'detailed accounts' of the legal services provided by counsel..." (id., 602).

It was also contended that the records could be withheld on the ground that they constituted attorney work product or material prepared for litigation that are exempted from disclosure by statute [see CPLR, §3101(c) and (d)]. In dealing with that claim, it was stated by the court that:

"Respondent's denial of the FOIL request cannot be upheld unless the descriptive material is uniquely the product of the professional skills of respondent's outside counsel. The preparation and submission of a bill for fees due and owing, not at all dependent on legal expertise, education or training, cannot be 'attribute[d]...to the unique skills of an attorney' (Brandman v. Cross & Brown Co., 125 Misc.2d 185, 188 479 N.Y.S.2d 435 [Sup. Ct. Kings Ct. 1984]). Therefore, the attorney work product privilege does not serve as an absolute bar to disclosure of the descriptive material. (See, id.).

"Nevertheless, depending upon how much information is set forth in the descriptive material, a limited portion of that information may be protected from disclosure, either under the work product privilege, or the privilege for materials prepared for litigation, as codified in CPLR 3101(d)...

"While the Court has not been presented with any of the billing records sought, the Court understands that they may contain specific references to: legal issues researched, which bears upon the law firm's theories of the landfill action; conferences with witnesses not yet identified and interviewed by respondent's adversary in that lawsuit; and other legal services which were provided as part of counsel's representation of respondent in that ongoing legal action...Certainly, any such references to interviews, conversations or correspondence with particular individuals, prospective pleadings or motions, legal theories, or similar matters, may be protected either as work product or material prepared for litigation, or both" (emphasis added by the court) (id., 604).

Finally, it was contended that the records consisted of intra-agency materials that could be withheld under §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

The court found that much of the information would likely consist of factual information available under §87(2)(g)(i) and stated that:

"...the Court concludes that respondent has failed to establish that petitioner should be denied access to the descriptive material as a whole. While it is possible that some of the descriptive material may fall within the exempted category of expressions of opinion, respondent has failed to identify with any particularity those portions which are not subject to disclosure under Public Officers Law §87(2)(g). See, Matter of Dunlea v. Goldmark, supra, 54 A.D.2d 449, 389 N.Y.S.2d 423. Certainly, any information which merely reports an event or factual occurrence, such as a conference, telephone call, research, court appearance, or similar description of legal work, and which does not disclose opinions, recommendations or statements of legal strategy will not be barred from disclosure under this exemption. See, Ingram v. Axelrod, supra" (id., 605-606).

In short, although it was found that some aspects of the records in question might properly be withheld based on their specific contents, a blanket denial of access was clearly inconsistent with law, and substantial portions of the records were found to be accessible.

In the context of a school district's duties, insofar as the records identify or could identify particular students, I believe that they must be withheld. Another statute that exempts records from disclosure is the Family Education Rights and Privacy Act ("FERPA", 20 U.S.C. §1232g). In brief, FERPA applies to all educational agencies or institutions that participate in grant programs administered by the United States Department of Education. As such, FERPA includes within its scope virtually all public educational institutions and many private educational institutions. The focal point of the Act is the protection of privacy of students. It provides, in general, that any "education record," a term that is broadly defined, that is personally identifiable to a particular student or students is confidential, unless the parents of students under the age of eighteen waive their right to confidentiality, or unless a student eighteen years or over similarly waives his or her right to confidentiality. Further, the federal regulations promulgated under FERPA define the phrase "personally identifiable information" to include:

- "(a) The student's name;
- (b) The name of the student's parents or other family member;
- (c) The address of the student or student's family;
- (d) A personal identifier, such as the student's social security number or student number;
- (e) A list of personal characteristics that would make the student's identity easily traceable; or
- (f) Other information that would make the student's identity easily traceable" (34 CFR Section 99.3).

Based upon the foregoing, references to students' names or other aspects of records that would make a student's identity easily traceable must in my view be withheld in order to comply with federal law. Similarly, references to employees involved in disciplinary proceedings when such proceedings have not resulted in any final determination reflective of misconduct could be withheld on the ground that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" [see Herald Company v. School District of the City of Syracuse, 430 NY 2d 460 (1980)].

In a decision dealing specifically with bills involving services rendered by attorneys for a school district, that matter involved an applicant ("petitioner") who sought billing statements for legal services provided to the Board ("respondents") by a law firm. Since the statements made available included "only the time period covered and the total amount owed for services and disbursements", petitioner contended that "she is entitled to that billing information which would detail the fee, the type of matter for which the legal services were rendered and the names of the parties to any current litigation". In its discussion of the issue, the court found that:

"The difficulty of defining the limits of the attorney client privilege has been recognized by the New York State Court of Appeals. (Matter of Priest v. Hennessy, 51 NY2d 62, 68.) Nevertheless, the Court has ruled that this privilege is not limitless and generally does not extend to the fee arrangements between an attorney and client. (Matter of Priest v. Hennessy, supra.) As a communication regarding a fee has no direct relevance to the legal advice actually given, the fee arrangement is not privileged. (Matter of Priest v. Hennessy, supra, at 69.)

"There appear to be no New York cases which specifically address how much of a fee arrangement must be revealed beyond the name of the client, the amount billed and the terms of the agreement. However, the United States Court of Appeals, in interpreting federal law, has found that questions pertaining to the date and general nature of legal services performed were not violative of client confidentiality. (Cotton v. United States, 306 F.2d 633.) In that Court's analysis such information did not involve the substance of the matters was not privileged...

"...Respondents have not justified their refusal to obliterate any and all information which would reveal the date, general nature of service rendered and time spent. While the Court can understand that in a few limited instances the substance of a legal communication might be revealed in a billing statement, Respondents have failed to come forward with proof that such information is contained in each and every document so as to justify a blanket denial of disclosure. Conclusory characterizations are insufficient to support a claim of privilege. (Church of Scientology v. State of New York, 46 NY 2d 906, 908.)...Therefore, Petitioner's request for disclosure of the fee, type of matter and names of parties to pending litigation on each billing statement must be granted."

November 10, 1999

In sum, the blanket denial of access by the District was in my view inconsistent with the language of the Freedom of Information Law and judicial interpretations of that statute.

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of the Freedom of Information Law, copies of this opinion will be forwarded to District officials.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Joseph Micklas

Dear Mr. Micklas:

I have received your letter of September 30 in which you sought an opinion concerning the Freedom of Information Law.

According to your letter, a member of the Mechanicville School District Board of Education "read a letter, in public session, about a particular subject that had his strong support", and his intent "was to convince other fellow board members to join his opinion." You have asked whether that letter is subject to the Freedom of Information Law.

From my perspective, a letter prepared or acquired by a member of a board of education and read aloud at an open meeting of the board falls within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law and must be disclosed on request. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First and most importantly, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to agency records, and §86(4) of that statute defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

The Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, has construed the definition as broadly as its specific language suggests. The first such decision that dealt squarely with the scope of the term "record" involved documents pertaining to a lottery sponsored by a fire department. Although the agency contended that the documents did not pertain to the performance of its official duties, i.e., fighting fires, but rather to a "nongovernmental" activity, the Court rejected the claim of a "governmental versus nongovernmental dichotomy" [see Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581 (1980)] and found that the documents constituted "records" subject to rights of access granted by the Law. Moreover, the Court determined that:

"The statutory definition of 'record' makes nothing turn on the purpose for which it relates. This conclusion accords with the spirit as well as the letter of the statute. For not only are the expanding boundaries of governmental activity increasingly difficult to draw, but in perception, if not in actuality, there is bound to be considerable crossover between governmental and nongovernmental activities, especially where both are carried on by the same person or persons" (id.).

In a decision involving records prepared by corporate boards furnished voluntarily to a state agency, the Court of Appeals reversed a finding that the documents were not "records," thereby rejecting a claim that the documents "were the private property of the intervenors, voluntarily put in the respondents' 'custody' for convenience under a promise of confidentiality" [Washington Post v. Insurance Department, 61 NY 2d 557, 564 (1984)]. Once again, the Court relied upon the definition of "record" and reiterated that the purpose for which a document was prepared or the function to which it relates are irrelevant. Moreover, the decision indicated that "When the plain language of the statute is precise and unambiguous, it is determinative" (id. at 565).

In another decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, the Court focused on an agency claim that it could "engage in unilateral prescreening of those documents which it deems to be outside of the scope of FOIL" and found that such activity "would be inconsistent with the process set forth in the statute" [Capital Newspapers v. Whalen, 69 NY 2d 246, 253 (1987)]. The Court determined that:

"...the procedure permitting an unreviewable prescreening of documents - which respondents urge us to engraft on the statute - could be used by an uncooperative and obdurate public official or agency to block an entirely legitimate request. There would be no way to prevent a custodian of records from removing a public record from FOIL's reach by simply labeling it 'purely private.' Such a construction, which would thwart the entire objective of FOIL by creating an easy means of avoiding compliance, should be rejected" (id., 254).

Most recently, the Court of Appeals found that materials received by a corporation providing services for a branch of the State University that were kept on behalf of the University constituted "records" falling within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law. I point out that the Court rejected "SUNY's contention that disclosure turns on whether the requested information is in the physical possession of the agency", for such a view "ignores the plain language of the FOIL definition of 'records' as information kept or held 'by, with or for an agency'" [see Encore College Bookstores,

November 10, 1999

Inc. v. Auxiliary Services Corporation of the State University of New York at Farmingdale, 87 NY 2d 410, 417 (1995)].

In a different but related vein, in a decision involving notes taken by the Secretary to the Board of Regents that he characterized as "personal" in conjunction with a contention that he took notes in part "as a private person making personal notes of observations...in the course of" meetings, the court cited the definition of "record" and determined that the notes did not consist of personal property but rather were records subject to rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law [Warder v. Board of Regents, 410 NYS 2d 742, 743 (1978)].

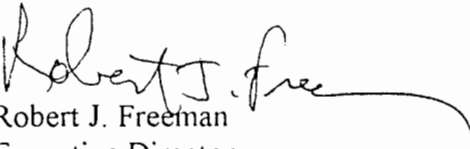

In short, based on the language of the Freedom of Information Law and its judicial interpretation, it is clear in my view that the letter in question is an "agency record", irrespective of whether it is kept in District offices.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since the letter was read aloud at an open meeting, there would be no basis for denying access to that document.

As you requested, copies of this opinion will be forwarded to the persons identified in your letter.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Pedro Laureano

Sing Sing Correctional Facility

Dear Mr. Laureano:

I have received your letter of October 4, as well as the correspondence attached to it. You have sought assistance in relation to an appeal sent to the Department of Correctional Services on September 1 that had not been answered and concerning rights of access to "quarterly evaluations" pertaining to you.

In this regard, as you may be aware, §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law pertains to the right to appeal a denial of access to records and states in relevant part that:

I point out that it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

With respect to rights of access, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Of apparent relevance to the records in question is §87(2)(g), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

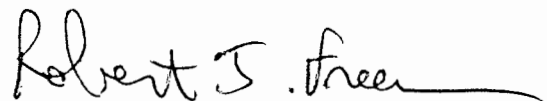

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Enclosed as requested is a copy of the latest supplement to the Committee's annual report.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Charles Hili
89-A-7044
P.O. Box 700
Wallkill, NY 12589

Dear Mr. Hili:

I have received your letter of September 30 in which you questioned the propriety of a denial of a request for records by the parole officer at your facility. He wrote that:

“The New York State Division of Parole Policy is to honor ‘F.O.I.L. Requests’ when someone meets the following criteria:

- 1) Within (2) two months of a scheduled Parole Board Appearance;
- 2) Having appeared before the Parole Board within the last (2) two months.
- 3) Have a pending appeal with the N.Y.S. Division of Parole.

“As you do not meet the above criteria, your F.O.I.L. request is denied.”

In my view, the response is inconsistent with law. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, when records are accessible under the Freedom of Information Law, it has been held that they should be made equally available to any person, regardless of one's status, interest or the intended use of the records [see Burke v. Yudelson, 368 NYS 2d 779, aff'd 51 AD 2d 673, 378 NYS 2d 165 (1976)]. Moreover, the Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, has held that:

"FOIL does not require that the party requesting records make any showing of need, good faith or legitimate purpose; while its purpose may be to shed light on government decision-making, its ambit is not confined to records actually used in the decision-making process. (Matter of Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581.) Full disclosure by public agencies is, under FOIL, a public right and in the public interest, irrespective of the status or need of the person making the request" [Farbman v. New York City Health and Hospitals Corporation, 62 NY 2d 75, 80 (1984)].

Farbman pertained to a situation in which a person involved in litigation against an agency requested records from that agency under the Freedom of Information Law. In brief, it was found that one's status as a litigant had no effect upon that person's right as a member of the public when using the Freedom of Information Law, irrespective of the intended use of the records. Similarly, unless there is a basis for withholding records in accordance with the grounds for denial appearing in §87(2), the use of the records is in my opinion irrelevant.

Second, in brief, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." From my perspective, there is no statute that would exempt the records in question from disclosure. I note that §259-a of the Executive Law requires that the Division of Parole maintain certain kinds of records. Section 259-k provides in subdivision (2) that the Board of Parole "shall make rules for the purpose of maintaining the confidentiality of records, information contained therein and information obtained in an official capacity by officers, employees or members of the division of parole." The Division's regulations, 9 NYCRR §8000.5(c), pertain to disclosure of case records maintained by the Division. That provision confers limited rights of access to case records and states in paragraph (2)(ii) that "any record of the division of parole not made available pursuant to this section shall not be released, except by the chairman upon good cause shown." Section 8008.2(a) of the regulations defines the phrase "case record" to include: "...any memorandum, document or other writing pertaining to a present or former inmate, parolee, conditional releasee or other releasee, and maintained pursuant to sections 259-a(1)-(3) and 259-c(3) of the Executive Law."

The statutes and regulations that preceded those cited above and which pertained to the Board of Parole when it was part of the Department of Correctional Services included essentially the same direction. However, insofar as the regulations conflicted with the Freedom of Information Law, they were found more than twenty years ago to be invalid. Specifically, in Zuckerman v. Board of Parole, the court found that:

"Section 221 of the Correction Law, entitled 'Records', requires the commissioner to keep complete records 'of every person released on parole or conditional release'. The statute also requires the commissioner to make rules as to the privacy of these records. Under the authority of these two statutory mandates (7 NYCRR 5.1 [a]), the following regulation was promulgated: 'Department records. Any department record not otherwise made available by rule or regulation of the department shall be confidential for the sole use of the department.' (7 NYCRR 5.10). The minutes of board meetings are not 'made available by rule or regulation' and, therefore, Special Term held that the minutes are private.

"It would seem clear that section 29 of the Correction Law exempts from disclosure those specifically enumerated statistics and, further, that section 221 exempts those records dealing with parolees. Minutes of Parole Board meetings are not specifically exempted by either of these statutes. Applying the rule of ejusdem generis (McKinney's Cons Laws of NY, Book 1, Statutes, §239, subd b), the nonexclusive list contained in subdivision 1 of section 29 of the Correction Law could not be construed to include those minutes.

"It would therefore appear that this regulation, as applied to the minutes of Parole Board meetings, is invalid on two grounds. As shown above, the regulation makes all records private initially and is not limited solely to those categories of information specifically set forth or included by reasonable implication in the statutes. Furthermore, by making all records initially confidential in a broad and sweeping manner, the regulation violates the clear intention of the Freedom of Information Law (see Public Officers Law, §85). It is established as a general proposition that a regulation cannot be inconsistent with a statutory scheme (see e.g. Matter of Broadacres Skilled Nursing Facility v. Ingraham, 51 AD2d 243, 245-246)... This conclusion is further reinforced by the general rule that public disclosure laws are to be liberally construed..." [53 AD 2d 405, 407(1976); emphasis supplied by the court; see also Morris v. Martin, 440 NYS 2d 1026 (1982)].

In sum, based upon the direction provided judicially, unless the records in question can be characterized as being exempted from disclosure by statute, neither a policy nor regulations would serve to enable the Department to withhold records that would otherwise be available under the Freedom of Information Law.

Lastly, when an agency denies access to records, the applicant has the right to appeal pursuant to §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states in relevant part that:

Chief of Police
Waterloo Police Department

Waterloo, NY 13165

Dear Chief Marquart:

I have received your letter of October 5 in which you described your Department's practices concerning the disclosure of records pertaining to apparently eligible youthful offenders. You referred specifically to a directive given by the Village Justice that the name of a 16, 17 or 18 year old who has been arrested for a felony cannot be disclosed due to youthful offender status and questioned the propriety of his position.

From my perspective, the policies of the Department as you described them are fully consistent with law. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Second, the initial ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." While records concerning youthful offenders might at some point fall within a statutory exemption from disclosure, that point is reached, in my view, only when or after a court determines that a person is a youthful offender.

Most relevant to the issue in my view is §720.15 of the Criminal Procedure Law, which provides that:

Chief Doyle L. Marquart

November 15, 1999

- "1. When an accusatory instrument against an apparently eligible youth is filed with a court, the court, with the defendant's consent, must order that it be filed as a sealed instrument, though only with respect to the public.
2. When a youth is initially arraigned upon an accusatory instrument, such arraignment and all proceedings in the action thereafter may, in the discretion of the court and which the defendant's consent, be conducted in private.
3. The provisions of subdivisions one and two of this section requiring or authorizing the accusatory instrument filed against a youth to be sealed, and the arraignment and all proceedings in the action be conducted in private shall not apply in connection with a pending charge of committing any felony offense as defined in the penal law."

Based upon the foregoing, it is clear in my opinion that only a court has the authority to seal an accusatory instrument that identifies "an apparently eligible youth". Further, subdivision (3) of §720.15 narrows the applicability of subdivisions (1) and (2) and the capacity to seal records or conduct private proceedings by distinguishing between apparently eligible youths charged with felonies from others.

It is possible that records pertaining to an apparently eligible youth charged with a felony may at some point be adjudicated a youthful offender, in which case the records pertaining to that person may be sealed under §720.35 of the Criminal Procedural Law. However, until that occurs, I believe that the records and proceedings concerning such an individual would be open to the public to the same extent as similar records or proceedings concerning adults.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Francis T. Murray
County Attorney
County of Ulster
P.O. Box 1800
240 Fair Street
Kingston, NY 12402-1800

Dear Mr. Murray:

I have received your letter of October 14, as well as the memorandum attached to it. The issue involve the extent to which the County is required to generate information stored electronically under the Freedom of Information Law. You wrote that the memorandum "points out that where a program doesn't exist to run against existing raw data, a program must be produced by an operator and loaded to access the data in the requested form." It is your view that those steps may represent the "creation of a new document..."

In this regard, as you are aware, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. Section 89(3) of that statute provides in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. I point out, however, that §86(4) of the Freedom of Information Law defines the term "record" expansively to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Based upon the language quoted above, if information is maintained in some physical form, it would in my opinion constitute a "record" subject to rights of access conferred by the Law. Further, the definition of "record" includes specific reference to computer tapes and discs, and it was held some fifteen years ago that "[i]nformation is increasingly being stored in computers and access to such data should not be restricted merely because it is not in printed form" [Babigian v. Evans, 427 NYS 2d 688, 691 (1980); aff'd 97 AD 2d 992 (1983); see also, Szikszy v. Buelow, 436 NYS 2d 558 (1981)].

November 17, 1999

When information is maintained electronically, it has been advised that if the information sought is available under the Freedom of Information Law and may be retrieved by means of existing computer programs, an agency is required to disclose the information. In that kind of situation, the agency in my view would merely be retrieving data that it has the capacity to retrieve. Disclosure may be accomplished either by printing out the data on paper or perhaps by duplicating the data on another storage mechanism, such as a computer tape or disk. On the other hand, if information sought can be retrieved from a computer or other storage medium only by means of new programming or the alteration of existing programs, those steps would, in my opinion, be the equivalent of creating a new record. As stated earlier, since §89(3) does not require an agency to create a record, I do not believe that an agency would be required to reprogram or develop new programs to retrieve information that would otherwise be available [see Guerrier v. Hernandez-Cuebas, 165 AD 2d 218 (1991)].

If information sought does not now exist or cannot be retrieved or extracted without new programming or reprogramming, an agency would not, in my opinion, be obliged to develop new programs or modify its existing programs in an effort to generate the data of an applicant's interest. Those steps, in my view, would exceed an agency's responsibilities under the Freedom of Information Law, and in those instances, if an agency wants to accommodate an applicant, it has been advised that an agency is not limited to the fees that would ordinarily be applicable under that statute. Stated differently, if the County chooses to develop new programs in a manner that exceeds its duties imposed by the Freedom of Information Law, I believe that it may contract with the applicant and determine a mutually agreeable fee for services.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

I regret that I cannot email copies of the opinions to which you referred because they were prepared years ago, before they could be electronically stored or transmitted. If you provide an address or a fax number, they can be mailed or faxed to you.

With respect to the issue, all agency records fall within the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law, and under §89(3) of that statute, an agency may require that a request be made in writing. As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based on a presumption of access. Stated differently, all agency records are available, except to the extent that one or more grounds for denial listed in §87(2) may be asserted. The staff of the Committee on Open Government is authorized to issue advisory opinions. The ensuing staff advisory opinion is based solely upon the information presented in your correspondence.

Dear Mr. Duvall:

I have received your letter of October 5. You wrote that you submitted requests under the Freedom of Information Law to the New York City Police Department and the Office of the Bronx County District Attorney relating to a murder charge for which you were convicted in a jury trial. Both agencies have indicated that their files concerning the matter cannot be located. If they cannot find the records, you asked if there is case law that would enable you "to argue this matter in court."

First, although the nature of your question is unclear, I note that when an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

I point out that in Key v. Hynes [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search". However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when "the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made" [Thomas v. Records Access Officer, 613 NYS 2d 929, 205 AD 2d 786 (1994)].

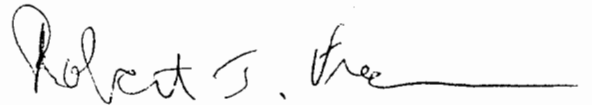

Second, while the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law, court records are generally available under other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255). As such, an alternative source of the records of your interest, particularly since the matter relates to a jury trial, would be the court in which the proceeding was conducted. When seeking court records, it suggested that a request be made to the clerk of the court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Venable:

I have received your letter of October 4 in which you sought information concerning your ability to obtain a trial transcript and other records that a police department and a prosecutor have failed to produce.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law excludes the courts and court records from its coverage. In the case of Moore v. Santucci [151 AD2d 677 (1989)], it was held that the office of a district attorney was "not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. At 680). As such, transcripts of judicial proceedings maintained by the office of a district attorney or a police department would fall outside the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law.

It is suggested that you seek the transcripts from the clerk of the court in which the proceeding was conducted. Although court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law, they are frequently available under other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Fishkill Correctional Facility
Box 1245

Dear Mr. Bouros:

I have received your letter of October 1 in which you complained that the records access officer for the New York City Department of Correction has not responded to your request for records in a timely fashion.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

November 18, 1999

explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Great Meadow Correctional Facility
Box 51
Comstock, NY 12821-0051

Dear Mr. Clark:

I have received your letter of October 5 in which you sought assistance in obtaining witness statements made to City of Rochester police officers concerning the crime for which you were convicted.

In this regard, I am unfamiliar with the extent to which the records in question might previously have been disclosed, i.e., in the context of a judicial proceeding, to you or your attorney. Of potential relevance to the matter is the decision rendered in Moore v. Santucci [151 AD 2d 677 (1989)], in which it was held that if records have been disclosed during a public proceeding, they are generally available under the Freedom of Information Law. In that decision, it was also found, however, that an agency need not make available records that had been previously disclosed to the applicant or that person's attorney, unless there is an allegation "in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence." In my view, if you can "in evidentiary form" demonstrate that neither you nor your attorney maintain records that had previously been disclosed, the agency would be required to respond to a request for the same records. I also point out, however, that the decision in Moore specified that the respondent office of a district attorney was "not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

Third, assuming that the records sought involving statements by witnesses have not been previously disclosed, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law would determine rights of access. As a general matter, that statute is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, several of the grounds for denial could be pertinent.

Section 87(2)(b) permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". From my perspective, the propriety of a denial of access would, under the circumstances, be dependent upon the nature of statements by witnesses or the contents of other records have already been disclosed. If disclosure of the records in question would not serve to infringe upon witnesses' privacy in view of prior disclosures, §87(2)(b) might not justifiably serve as a basis for denial. However, if the statements in question include substantially different information, that provision may be applicable.

Also potentially relevant is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in subparagraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Section 87(2)(f) permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would "endanger the life or safety of any person." Without knowledge of the facts and circumstances of your case, I could not conjecture as to the relevance of that provision.

Lastly, §87(2)(g) authorizes an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

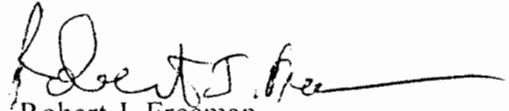

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

Mr. Bradford Clark
November 18, 1999
Page -3-

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Patrick Maranzino
96-R-8852
Mid-State Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 2500
Marcy, NY 13403

Dear Mr. Maranzino:

I have received your letter of September 28, which reached this office on October 12. Please note that the Committee's address has changed.

As I understand the matter, you have requested copies of records relating to your statement concerning a certain incident, "a Grand Larceny or House Burglary", that occurred in Suffolk County in 1996. Your request was made on the basis of 5 USC §§552 and 552a, and as of the date of your letter to this office, you had received no response.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the statutes to which you referred are, respectively, the federal Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts, which apply only to federal agencies. The statute that generally governs rights of access to records maintained by state and local government in New York is this state's Freedom of Information Law.

Second, in brief, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Without knowledge of the nature or contents of the records of your interest, I cannot offer specific guidance. However, several grounds for denial may be pertinent.

Section 87(2)(a) pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §160.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law. Under that provision, if charges against a person have been dismissed, the records relating to the incident are sealed. If §160.50 is applicable, the records would be exempted from disclosure by statute.

If that statute does not apply, it is likely that the Freedom of Information Law would serve as the basis for determining rights of access.

Of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Perhaps the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

Also relevant ground for denial may be §87(2)(g). The cited provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;

- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government... "

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial applies. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Records prepared by employees of an agency and communicated within the agency or to another agency would in my view fall within the scope of §87(2) (g). Those records might include opinions or recommendations, for example, that could be withheld.

Third, I point out that in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available. However, in the same decision, it was also found that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

Lastly, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

Mr. Patrick Maranzino

requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

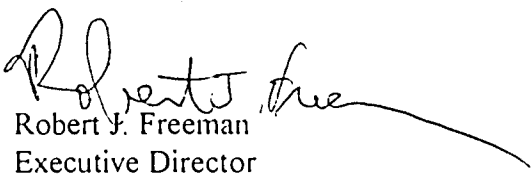

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

For your information, I believe that the person designated to determine appeals in the situation that you described is the Suffolk County Attorney.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Harry Bourletos

Dear Mr. Bourletos:

I have received your letter of October 7, as well as the correspondence attached to it. You have sought assistance in relation to a request to the Town of Kent for a variety of materials concerning "the process whereby the town board of Kent decided to kill Canada Geese." The records sought included surveys or opinion polls used to obtain the views of residents and the documentation describing the statistical factors associated with the distribution and response to the surveys or polls, documentation indicating the Town's intent to kill the geese, notices of meetings by the Board informing the public of its intent to consider killing the geese, correspondence on the matter between Town official and other governmental officials, as well contractors, "threatening letters" and similar materials received by Town officials and others pertaining to the killing of geese, documents relating to allegations of illness caused by contact with geese, invoices relating to the use of "non-lethal methods" of dealing with geese and a "copy of permit issued by the DEC and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service authorizing the slaughter of the geese."

In response to the request, the attorney for the Town denied the request in its entirety, stating that "your request is in the nature of a discovery demand." He added that "at present we are unaware of any statistical data associated with the Canadian geese."

From my perspective, that the request may be in the nature of a "discovery demand" is irrelevant. The issues, in my view, involve the extent to which the records exist and are maintained by or for the Town; the extent to which the request "reasonably describes" the records as required by §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law; and the extent to which any such records may properly be withheld pursuant to §87(2) of that statute. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

It is noted at the outset that the courts have provided direction concerning the Freedom of Information Law as opposed to the use of discovery under the Civil Practice Law and Rules (CPLR) in civil proceedings, and discovery in criminal proceedings under the Criminal Procedure Law (CPL).

The principle is that the Freedom of Information Law is a vehicle that confers rights of access upon the public generally, while the disclosure provisions of the CPLR or the CPL, for example, are separate vehicles that may require or authorize disclosure of records due to one's status as a litigant or defendant.

As stated by the state's highest court, the Court of Appeals, in a case involving a request made under the Freedom of Information Law by a person involved in litigation against an agency: "Access to records of a government agency under the Freedom of Information Law (FOIL) (Public Officers Law, Article 6) is not affected by the fact that there is pending or potential litigation between the person making the request and the agency" [Farbman v. NYC Health and Hospitals Corporation, 62 NY 2d 75, 78 (1984)]. Similarly, in an earlier decision, the Court of Appeals determined that "the standing of one who seeks access to records under the Freedom of Information Law is as a member of the public, and is neither enhanced...nor restricted...because he is also a litigant or potential litigant" [Matter of John P. v. Whalen, 54 NY 2d 89, 99 (1980)]. The Court in Farbman, supra, discussed the distinction between the use of the Freedom of Information Law as opposed to the use of discovery in Article 31 of the CPLR. Specifically, it was found that:

"FOIL does not require that the party requesting records make any showing of need, good faith or legitimate purpose; while its purpose may be to shed light on governmental decision-making, its ambit is not confined to records actually used in the decision-making process (Matter of Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581.) Full disclosure by public agencies is, under FOIL, a public right and in the public interest, irrespective of the status or need of the person making the request.

"CPLR article 31 proceeds under a different premise, and serves quite different concerns. While speaking also of 'full disclosure' article 31 is plainly more restrictive than FOIL. Access to records under CPLR depends on status and need. With goals of promoting both the ascertainment of truth at trial and the prompt disposition of actions (Allen v. Crowell-Collier Pub. Co., 21 NY 2d 403, 407), discovery is at the outset limited to that which is 'material and necessary in the prosecution or defense of an action'" [see Farbman, supra, at 80].

In sum, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law imposes a duty to disclose records, as well as the capacity to withhold them, irrespective of the status or interest of the person requesting them. To be distinguished are other provisions of law that may require disclosure based upon one's status, e.g., as a defendant, and the nature of the records or their materiality to a proceeding.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and §89(3) states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, if, for example, there are no statistics that have been prepared in relation to a survey or poll, the Town would not be required to prepare such records on your behalf.

When an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

I point out that in Key v. Hynes [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search". However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when "the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made" [Thomas v. Records Access Officer, 613 NYS 2d 929, 205 AD 2d 786 (1994)].

Third, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law is expansive in its scope, for it pertains to all agency records, including those of a town. Section 86(4) of the Law defines the term "record" broadly to include:

"any information kept, held, filed, produced, reproduced by, with or for an agency or the state legislature, in any physical form whatsoever including, but not limited to, reports, statements, examinations, memoranda, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, papers, designs, drawings, maps, photos, letters, microfilms, computer tapes or discs, rules, regulations or codes."

Fourth, as suggested earlier, §89(3) requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. I point out that it has been held by the Court of Appeals that to deny a request on the ground that it fails to reasonably describe the records, an agency must establish that "the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

The Court in Konigsberg found that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth and also stated that:

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency']" (id. at 250).

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping system. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

While I am unfamiliar with the recordkeeping systems of the Town, to extent that the records sought can be located with reasonable effort, I believe that the request would have met the requirement of reasonably describing the records.

Next, insofar as the records sought are maintained by or for the Town and the request has met the standard of reasonably describing such records, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. The Court of Appeals has stressed that the Freedom of Information Law should be construed expansively. Most recently, in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY 2d 267 (1996)], the Court reiterated its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law, stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the Police Department contended that "complaint follow up reports" could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g), an exception separate from that cited in response to your request. The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276), and stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, stating that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink vl. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

In the context of your request, while some aspects of the records might properly be withheld, I believe that the blanket denial of access by the Town's attorney was inconsistent with law. In considering the records sought, the following grounds for denial may be pertinent.

Many of the records sought would appear to consist of documentation prepared by or sent to Town officials that were prepared by Town or other state government officials. To that extent, §87(2)(g) would be applicable. While that provision potentially serves as a ground for denial, due to its structure it often requires disclosure. Section 87(2)(g) states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

I note that the definition of the term "agency" in §86(3) makes reference to entities of state and local government. Consequently, communications between the Town and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, a federal agency, would not constitute "inter-agency or intra-agency" material, and §87(2)(g) would not apply. Similarly, a private contractor or company would not be an agency, and communications between the town and those persons or entities would fall outside the scope of that provision as a basis for denial.

Further, the issuance of a license or permit, for instance, would reflect a final agency determination by either the Department of Environmental Conservation or the Fish and Wildlife Service and would clearly be available even if §87(2)(g) were applicable.

Also potentially significant is §87(2)(b), which permits an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure would result in "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." Any information that could be characterized as medical in nature could in my view be withheld [see §89(2)(b)]. Therefore, if, for instance, a resident informed the Town in writing that he or she contracted an illness, any identifying details regarding that person could, in my opinion, be deleted to protect his or her privacy.

Since you requested notices of meetings informing the public of the Town Board's intent to discuss the matter of the geese, I point out that the Open Meetings Law would not require that notices of meetings include that information. Section 104 of that statute requires that notice of the time and place of every meeting of a public body be given to the news media and by means of posting; there is no requirement that the notice include an agenda or reference to the subjects to be considered.

Lastly, when a request for records is denied, the applicant has the right to appeal pursuant to §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Further, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), which govern the procedural aspects of the Law, state that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation or the head, chief executive or governing body of other agencies shall hear appeals or shall designate a person or body to hear appeals regarding denial of access to records under the Freedom of Information Law.

(b) Denial of access shall be in writing stating the reason therefor and advising the person denied access of his or her right to appeal to the person or body established to hear appeals, and that person or body shall be identified by name, title, business address and business telephone number. The records access officer shall not be the appeals officer" (section 1401.7).

It is also noted that the state's highest court has held that a failure to inform a person denied access to records of the right to appeal enables that person to seek judicial review of a denial. Citing the Committee's regulations and the Freedom of Information Law, the Court of Appeals in Barrett v. Morgenthau held that:

"[i]nasmuch as the District Attorney failed to advise petitioner of the availability of an administrative appeal in the office (see, 21 NYCRR 1401.7[b]) and failed to demonstrate in the proceeding that the procedures for such an appeal had, in fact, even been established (see, Public Officers Law [section] 87[1][b], he cannot be heard to complain that petitioner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies" [74 NY 2d 907, 909 (1989)].

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of the Freedom of Information Law, copies of this opinion will be forwarded to Town officials.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

RJF

Dear Mr. Falcon:

I have received your letter of October 15. You wrote that the volunteer organization that you serve was the subject of a complaint made to the Racing and Wagering Board that was found to be without merit. You have questioned your rights of access to the complaint and other records relating to the investigation of the complaint.

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

With respect to complaints, it has generally been advised that the substance of a complaint is available, but that those portions of the complaint which identify complainants may be deleted on the ground that disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. I point out that §89(2)(b) states that an "agency may delete identifying details when it makes records available." Further, the same provision contains five examples of unwarranted invasions of personal privacy, the last two of which include:

"iv. disclosure of information of a personal nature when disclosure would result in economic or personal hardship to the subject party and such information is not relevant to the work of the agency requesting or maintaining it; or

- v. disclosure of information of a personal nature reported in confidence to an agency and not relevant to the ordinary work of such agency."

In my view, what is relevant to the work of the agency is the substance of the complaint, i.e., whether or not the complaint has merit. The identity of the person who made the complaint is often irrelevant to the work of the agency, and in such circumstances, I believe that identifying details may be deleted.

With regard to the records prepared during an investigation, without knowledge of the content of the records, I cannot offer specific guidance. However, if, for example, persons other than the complainant were interviewed or were witnesses, it is likely that identifying details concerning those persons could be withheld, also on the ground that disclosure would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. The other provision of likely relevance pertains to internal communications made by staff at the Board or perhaps with other governmental entities. Specifically, §87(2)(g) permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Todeschini:

I have received your letter October 13 in which you asked that this office answer a question under the Freedom of Information Law, specifically, whether this agency "knows of any official or unofficial use of a book entitled 'We Get Confessions'" by the Rochester Police Department, its officers or by any law enforcement agency.

In this regard, the primary function of the Committee on Open Government involves providing advice and opinions concerning public access to government records and meetings, and I have no knowledge concerning the publication to which you referred or its use.

Further, in my view, your inquiry did not constitute a valid or appropriate request for purposes of the Freedom of Information Law. I note that the title of that statute may be somewhat misleading, for it is not a vehicle that requires agencies to provide information per se; rather, it requires agencies to disclose records to the extent provided by law. As such, while an agency official may choose to answer questions or to provide information by responding to questions, those steps would represent actions beyond the scope of the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. Moreover, the Freedom of Information pertains to existing records. Section 89(3) of that statute states in part that an agency need not create a record in response to a request.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Martin Wilbur
Assistant Editor
North County News
1520 Front Street
Yorktown Heights, NY 10598

Dear Mr. Wilbur:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of October 12 in which you sought an advisory opinion concerning a request for records that has been denied by the Town of Putnam Valley.

According to your letter, the Town was negotiating with the City of Middletown to accept its garbage, and "[s]tatements made by the Supervisor led everyone to believe that the signing of a 20-year contract was imminent." Nevertheless, you indicated that the negotiations "have ceased" and that none are scheduled. Having requested a "proposed inter-municipal contract", the Town denied the request, in your words, on the ground that "release of that information would jeopardize the town's standing during contract talks." You have asked whether such a proposed agreement must be disclosed, "even if negotiations are not yet complete."

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The provision upon which the Town appears to have relied to withhold records, §87(2)(c), permits an agency to deny access to records to the extent that disclosure "would impair present or imminent contract awards or collective bargaining negotiations." The key word in that provision in my opinion is "impair", and the question under that provision involves whether or the extent to which disclosure would "impair" the process by diminishing the ability of the government to reach an optimal agreement on behalf of the taxpayers. That a contract has not been signed or ratified, in my view, is not determinative of rights of access or, conversely, an agency's ability to deny access to records. Rather, I believe that consideration of the effects of disclosure is the primary factor in determining the extent to which §87(2)(c) may justifiably be asserted.

As I understand its application, §87(2)(c) generally encompasses situations in which an agency or a party to negotiations maintains records that have not been made available to others. For example, if an agency seeking bids or proposals has received a number of bids, but the deadline for their submission has not been reached, premature disclosure for the bids to another possible submitter might provide that person or firm with an unfair advantage vis a vis those who already submitted bids. Further, disclosure of the identities of bidders or the number of bidders might enable another potential bidder to tailor his bid in a manner that provides him with an unfair advantage in the bidding process. In such a situation, harm or "impairment" would likely be the result, and the records could justifiably be denied. However, after the deadline for submission of bids or proposals are available after a contract has been awarded, and that, in view of the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law, "the successful bidder had no reasonable expectation of not having its bid open to the public" [Contracting Plumbers Cooperative Restoration Corp. v. Ameruso, 105 Misc. 2d 951, 430 NYS 2d 196, 198 (1980)]. Similarly, if an agency is involved in collective bargaining negotiations with a public employee union, and the union requests records reflective of the agency's strategy, the items that it considers to be important or otherwise, its estimates and projections, it is likely that disclosure to the union would place the agency at an unfair disadvantage at the bargaining table and, therefore, that disclosure would "impair" negotiating the process.

It is noted that the Court of Appeals sustained the assertion of §87(2)(c) in a case that did not clearly involve "contract awards" or collective bargaining negotiations. In Murray v. Troy Urban Renewal Agency [56 NY2d 888 (1982)], the issue pertained to real property transactions where appraisals in possession of an agency were requested prior to the consummation of a transaction. Because premature disclosure would have enabled the public to know the prices the agency sought, thereby potentially precluding the agency from receiving optimal prices, the agency's denial was upheld [see Murray v. Troy Urban Renewal Agency, 56 NY 2d 888 (1982)].

In each of the kinds of the situations described earlier, there is an inequality of knowledge. In the bid situation, the person who seeks bids prior to the deadline for their submission is presumably unaware of the content of the bids that have already been submitted; in the context of collective bargaining, the union would not have all of the agency's records relevant to the negotiations; in the appraisal situation, the person seeking that record is unfamiliar with its contents. As suggested above, premature disclosure of bids would enable a potential bidder to gain knowledge in a manner unfair to other bidders and possibly to the detriment of an agency and, therefore, the public. Disclosure of an records regarding collective bargaining strategy or appraisals would provide knowledge to the recipient that might effectively prevent an agency from engaging in an agreement that is most beneficial to taxpayers.

In a case involving negotiations between a New York City agency and the Trump organization, the court referred to an opinion that I prepared and adopted the reasoning offered therein, stating that:

"Section 87(2)(c) relates to withholding records whose release could impair contract awards. However, here this was not relevant because there is no bidding process involved where an edge could be unfairly given to one company. Neither is this a situation where the release of confidential information as to the value or appraisals of property could lead to the City receiving less favorable price.

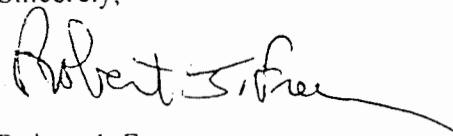

"In other words, since the Trump organization is the only party involved in these negotiations, there is no inequality of knowledge between other entities doing business with the City" [Community Board 7 v. Schaffer, 570 NYS 2d 769, 771 (1991); Aff'd 83 AD 2d 422; reversed on other grounds 84 NY 2d 148 (1994)].

Based on the foregoing, to the extent that the records at issue are known to both parties, the rationale described above and the judicial decisions rendered to date suggest that §87(2)(c) could not justifiably be asserted to withhold the records.

Lastly, records consisting of communications internal to an agency or between agencies typically fall within the coverage of §87(2)(g), which enables agencies to withhold "inter-agency or intra-agency materials", depending on their contents. A proposed inter-municipal contract, copies of which are in possession of both parties is not, based on decisions rendered by the state's highest court, the kind of record that falls within that exception. Most recently, in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY2d 267 (1990)], it was held that the intent of that provision "is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549])" and "to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations" (id., 276). The Town and the City in this instance would not have been seeking each other's advice or opinion; on the contrary, they were parties to a negotiation. Consequently, I do not believe that §87(2)(g) would serve as a basis for denial of access to a proposed contract that is in possession of both parties.

I hope that I have been of assistance. Should any further questions arise, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Palmer:

I have received your letter of October 11 in which you referred to my response to you of October 1 and complained that the Childrens Aid Society in New York City had failed to respond to your request for records made under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, it is emphasized that the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to government agencies. Section 86(3) of that statute defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Based on the foregoing, as a general matter, entities of state and local government in New York are subject to the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law; private, not-for-profit and profit making entities are beyond the coverage of that statute.

In short, assuming that the Childrens Aid Society is not a governmental entity, it would not be required to give effect to the Freedom of Information Law.

Ms. Betsy Calhoun
Garrison Union Free School Board of Education
241 South Highland Road
Garrison, NY 10524

Dear Ms. Calhoun:

I have received your letter of October 18 and the materials attached to it. In your capacity as a member of the Board of Education of the Garrison Union Free School District, you have asked that I discuss relevant principles of law in relation to certain aspects of its School Board Code of Ethics.

Based on §806 of the General Municipal Law, the pertinent portion of the Code provides as follows:

"Confidential information: An officer or employee shall not disclose confidential information acquired by him or her in the course of his or her official duties or use such information to further his or her personal interest.

"In addition, he/she shall not disclose information regarding any matters discussed in an executive session of the Board of Education whether such information is considered 'confidential' or not."

In view of the attachments, it appears that you are familiar with opinions rendered by this office that deal with the matter. While some of the ensuing commentary may be duplicative of points known to you, I offer the following remarks.

By way of background, §805-a of the General Municipal Law states in subdivision (1)(b) that "no municipal officer or employee shall...disclose confidential information acquired by him in the course of his official duties or use such information to further his personal interests." From my perspective, the term "confidential" has a narrow and precise technical meaning. For records or information to be validly characterized as confidential, I believe that such a claim must be based upon a statute that specifically confers or requires confidentiality. Stated differently, an act of Congress of the State Legislature must forbid disclosure in order to characterize information as confidential.

While a variety of subjects may properly be discussed during executive sessions and numerous records or portions thereof may validly be withheld under the Freedom of Information Law, the ability to exclude the public from a meeting or withhold records does not necessarily represent or signify a requirement of confidentiality. I note that both the Open Meetings Law and the Freedom of Information Law are permissive. Under §105 of the former, a public body, such as a board of education, may enter into executive session to discuss one or more of the subjects appearing in paragraphs (a) through (h) of subdivision (1); there is no requirement that those subjects be discussed in executive session. Moreover, as you are aware, in order to conduct an executive session, a motion to do so must be made and carried by a majority vote of the total membership of a public body. If such a motion does not carry, even though a public body might have the authority to discuss an issue in executive session, it would not have the obligation to do so. Similarly, under the Freedom of Information Law, §87(2) provides that an agency may withhold records in accordance with the grounds for denial of access that follow. The State's highest court has found that an agency may choose to disclose records even though it has the ability to deny access [see Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)].

Even though discussions by a public body may in appropriate circumstances be conducted in private and certain records may justifiably be withheld, the matters considered might not be "confidential", but rather beyond the scope of public rights of access. In a case in which the issue was whether discussions occurring during an executive session held by a school board could be considered "privileged", it was held that "there is no statutory provision that describes the matter dealt with at such a session as confidential or which in any way restricts the participants from disclosing what took place" (Runyon v. Board of Education, West Hempstead Union Free School District No. 27, Supreme Court, Nassau County, January 29, 1987). While §805-a of the General Municipal Law may be useful for providing guidance, for the reasons described above, I do not believe that the use of the term "confidential" is entirely clear, or that information acquired during an executive session may generally be characterized as "confidential."

The situation in which information considered by a board of education might validly be characterized as "confidential" would relate to matters pertaining to a particular student (i.e., in the case of consideration of disciplinary action, an educational program, an award, etc.). In those instances, I believe that a discussion would have to occur in private and that records would have to be withheld insofar as public discussion or disclosure would identify the student. As you may be aware, the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (20 USC §1232g) generally prohibits an educational agency from disclosing education records or information derived from those records that are identifiable to a student, unless the parents of the student consent to disclosure. In the context of the Open Meetings Law, a discussion concerning a student would constitute a matter made confidential by federal law and would be exempted from the coverage of that statute [see Open Meetings Law, §108(3)]. In the context of the Freedom of Information Law, an education record would be specifically exempted from disclosure by statute in accordance with §87(2)(a). In both contexts, I believe that a board of education, its members and school district employees would be prohibited from disclosing, because a statute requires confidentiality.

Although there may be no prohibition against disclosure of information acquired during executive sessions or records that could be withheld, the foregoing is not intended to suggest such disclosures would be uniformly appropriate or ethical. Obviously, the purpose of an executive session is to enable members of public bodies to deliberate, to speak freely and to develop strategies in situations in which some degree of secrecy is permitted. Similarly, the grounds for withholding records under the Freedom of Information Law relate in most instances to the ability to prevent some sort of harm. In both cases, inappropriate disclosures could work against the interests of a public body as a whole and the public generally. Further, a unilateral disclosure by a member of a public body might serve to defeat or circumvent the principles under which those bodies are intended to operate. Historically, I believe that public bodies were created to order to reach collective determinations, determinations that better reflect various points of view within a community than a single decision maker could reach alone. Members of boards should not in my opinion be unanimous in every instance; on the contrary, they should represent disparate points of view which, when conveyed as part of a deliberative process, lead to fair and representative decision making.

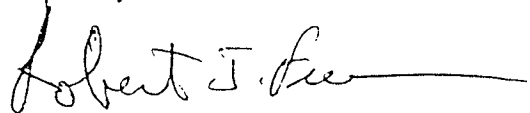

Disclosures made contrary to or in the absence of consent by the majority could result in unwarranted invasions of personal privacy, impairment of collective bargaining negotiations or even interference with criminal or other investigations. In those kinds of situations, even though there may be no statute that prohibits disclosure, release of information could be damaging to individuals and the functioning of government. On the other hand, however, if a public body has inappropriately discussed an issue during an executive session, a disclosure of the nature of the discussion may, in my view, be warranted.

Lastly, a portion of the Code indicates that a person who "knowingly and intentionally" violates its provisions "may be removed from office..." In this regard, due to the limited jurisdiction of this office, I cannot offer guidance or comment with respect to the capacity of a board of education to seek removal of a member from office.

As you requested, this opinion will be sent to the Board of Education.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Paul M. Perfetti

Dear Mr. Perfetti:

I have received your letter of October 13, as well as the correspondence attached to it. You have asked that I review a denial of your request made to the Montgomery County Probation Department. You sought "[r]estitution dates and amounts for any and all payments made by or on behalf of Brandie Caldwell to an Order of Restitution/Reparation dated December 22 1998 by City Court Judge Howard M. Aison" and "a complete list of the distribution of the money received from Ms. Caldwell by the Probation Department including names, dates, and amounts."

In this regard, it is noted at the outset that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records and that §89(3) states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, if, for example, the Department does not maintain a "list" of monies distributed to an individual, it would not be required to prepare a list or a new record on your behalf.

Second, even if the information sought has been prepared, it appears that a denial of access would have been appropriate.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

With regard to probation records, §243(2) of the Executive Law states in relevant part that the director of the Division of Probation and Correctional Alternatives has the authority to promulgate regulations and that "[s]uch rules and regulations shall be binding upon all counties and eligible programs...and when duly adopted shall have the force and effect of law". Section 348.1(b) of the Division's regulations states that:

"(b) Cumulative case record is a single case file containing all information with respect to a case from its inception through its conclusion. All records developed and/or received by the probation department and which are related to the carrying out of authorized probation functions and services are considered probation records for the purpose of retention and destruction. Reports and other records material developed by the probation department and transmitted to the courts of other agencies become the responsibility of the court or other agencies as records."

Further, §348.4(k) of the regulations provides that: "Case records shall be accessible, in whole or in part, only to those authorized by law or court order."

Further, §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law permits an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure would result in "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." It appears that the cited provision would also authorized the Department to deny access.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Larry Highsmith
95-B-1960
P.O. Box 1187
Alden, NY 14004-1187

Dear Mr. Highsmith:

I have received your letter of October 11 in which you sought an opinion concerning requests for records directed to the Office of the Erie County District Attorney, the State Police and a court.

It is noted at the outset that the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and that §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. Even though other statutes may deal with access to court records, the procedural provisions associated with the Freedom of Information Law (i.e., those involving the designation of a records access officer or the right to appeal a denial) would not ordinarily be applicable.

Insofar as the records sought are maintained by a court, it is suggested that a request be made to the clerk, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for the request.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Without knowledge of the nature or content of most of the records that you requested, I cannot offer specific guidance. However, in the following paragraphs, reference will be made to the provisions that appear to be pertinent.

Several of the records involve eavesdropping warrant applications. The provision that you cited states in part that "[a]pplications made and warrants issued under this article shall be sealed by the justice" [Criminal Procedure Law, §700.55(1)]. Those records would fall within the scope of §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which authorizes an agency to withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute."

Perhaps the provision of primary significance relative to investigative and related materials is §87(2)(e). That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

Insofar as the denial involves a claim that disclosure would reveal investigative techniques, most relevant is §87(2)(e)(iv). The leading decision concerning that provision is Fink v. Lefkowitz, which involved access to a manual prepared by a special prosecutor that investigated nursing homes, in which the Court of Appeals held that:

"The purpose of this exemption is obvious. Effective law enforcement demands that violators of the law not be apprised the nonroutine procedures by which an agency obtains its information (see Frankel v. Securities & Exch. Comm., 460 F2d 813, 817, cert den 409 US 889). However beneficial its thrust, the purpose of the Freedom of Information Law is not to enable persons to use agency records to frustrate pending or threatened investigations nor to use that information to construct a defense to impede a prosecution.

"To be distinguished from agency records compiled for law enforcement purposes which illustrate investigative techniques, are those which articulate the agency's understanding of the rules and regulations it is empowered to enforce. Records drafted by the body charged with enforcement of a statute which merely clarify procedural or substantive law must be disclosed. Such information in the hands of the public does not impede effective law enforcement. On the contrary, such knowledge actually encourages voluntary compliance with the law by detailing the standards with which a person is expected to comply, thus allowing him to conform his conduct to those requirements (see Stokes v. Brennan, 476 F2d 699, 702; Hawkes v. Internal Revenue Serv., 467 F2d 787, 794-795; Davis, Administrative Law [1970 Supp], section 3A, p 114).

"Indicative, but not necessarily dispositive of whether investigative techniques are nonroutine is whether disclosure of those procedures would give rise to a substantial likelihood that violators could evade detection by deliberately tailoring their conduct in anticipation of avenues of inquiry to be pursued by agency personnel (see Cox v. United States Dept. of Justice, 576 F2d 1302, 1307-1308; City of Concord v. Ambrose, 333 F Supp 958). It is no secret that numbers on a balance sheet can be made to do magical things by scrupulous nursing home operators the path that an audit is likely to take and alerting them to items to which investigators are instructed to pay particular attention, does not encourage observance of the law. Rather, release of such information actually countenances fraud by enabling miscreants to alter their books and activities to minimize the possibility of being brought to task for criminal activities. In such a case, the procedures contained in an administrative manual are, in a very real sense, compilations of investigative techniques exempt from disclosure. The Freedom of Information Law was not enacted to furnish the safecracker with the combination to the safe" (id. at 572-573).

In applying those criteria to specific portions of the manual, which was compiled for law enforcement purposes, the Court found that:

"Chapter V of the Special Prosecutor's Manual provides a graphic illustration of the confidential techniques used in a successful nursing home prosecution. None of those procedures are 'routine' in the sense of fingerprinting or ballistic tests (see Senate Report No. 93-1200, 93 Cong 2d Sess [1974]). Rather, they constitute detailed, specialized methods of conducting an investigation into the activities of a specialized industry in which voluntary compliance with the law has been less than exemplary.

"Disclosure of the techniques enumerated in those pages would enable an operator to tailor his activities in such a way as to significantly diminish the likelihood of a successful prosecution. The information detailed on pages 481 and 482 of the manual, on the other hand, is merely a recitation of the obvious: that auditors should pay particular attention to requests by nursing homes for Medicaid reimbursement rate increases based upon projected increase in cost. As this is simply a routine technique that would be used in any audit, there is no reason why these pages should not be disclosed" (id. at 573).

While I am unfamiliar with the records in question, it would appear that those portions which, if disclosed, would enable potential lawbreakers to evade detection could likely be withheld. It is noted that in another decision which dealt with a request for certain regulations of the State Police, the Court of Appeals found that some aspects of the regulations were non-routine, and that disclosure could "allow miscreants to tailor their activities to evade detection" [De Zimm v. Connelie, 64 NY 2d 860 (1985)]. Nevertheless, other portions of the records might be "routine" and apparently would not if disclosed preclude police officers from carrying out their duties effectively.

With respect to records that were subpoenaed, in my view, to characterize all such records as having been compiled for law enforcement purposes, even though they may be used in or pertinent to an investigation, would be inconsistent with both the language and the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law. Case law illustrates why a broad construction of §87(2)(e) would give rise to an anomalous result. Specifically, in King v. Dillon (Supreme Court, Nassau County, December 19, 1984), the District Attorney was engaged in an investigation of the petitioner, who had served as a village clerk. In conjunction with the investigation, the District Attorney obtained minutes of meetings of the village board of trustees "pursuant to a Grand Jury subpoena." Those minutes, which were prepared by the petitioner, were requested from the District Attorney. In granting access to the minutes, the decision indicated that "the party resisting disclosure has the burden of proof in establishing entitlement to the exemption," and the judge wrote that he:

"must note in the first instance that the records sought were not compiled for law enforcement purposes (P.O.L. 87[2]e). Minutes of Village Board meetings serve a different function... These were public records, ostensibly prepared by the petitioner, so there can be little question of the disclosure of confidential material."

Often records prepared in the ordinary course of business, some of which might already have been disclosed under the Freedom of Information Law, become relevant to or used in a law enforcement investigation or perhaps in litigation. In my view, when that occurs, the records would not be transformed into records compiled for law enforcement purposes. If they would have been available prior to their use in a law enforcement context, I believe that they would remain available, notwithstanding their use in that context for a purpose inconsistent with the reason for which they were prepared.

Mr. Larry Highsmith
November 23, 1999

Also of possible relevance is section 87(2)(f). That provision permits an agency to withhold records when disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person." To the extent that disclosure would endanger the life or safety of law enforcement officers or others, it appears that §87(2)(f) would be applicable.

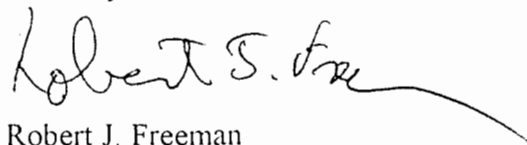

With respect to prior disclosures of records, it was held in Moore v. Santucci [151 AD2d 677 (1989)] that if records have been disclosed during a public proceeding, they are generally available under the Freedom of Information Law. In that decision, it was also found that an agency need not make available records that had been previously disclosed to the applicant or that person's attorney, unless there is an allegation "in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence." In my view, if you can "in evidentiary form" demonstrate that neither you nor your attorney maintains records that had previously been disclosed, the agency would be required to respond to a request for the same records.

I also point out that the decision in Moore specified that the respondent office of a district attorney was "not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680). Insofar as records requested from an office of a district attorney may properly be characterized as court records, it appears that the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

Lastly, with respect to the specificity of a request, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that an applicant must "reasonably describe" the records sought. Therefore, an applicant is not required to identify the records requested with particularity; rather, he or she must provide sufficient detail to enable agency staff to locate and identify the records.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Jordan:

I have received your letter of October 14 in which you asked whether you might use the Freedom of Information Law "to help find a friend [you] have lost contact with for some ten years."

From my perspective, the extent to which you can use the Freedom of Information Law to find a lost friend is questionable. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, that statute is applicable to agency records, and §86(3) defines the term "agency" to mean:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

Based on the foregoing, the Freedom of Information Law generally pertains to records maintained by entities of state and local government in New York.

Second, to make what may be a successful request, such a request should be made to the "records access officer" at the agency or agencies that you believe would maintain the records of your interest. The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests. I note that there is no single location or database that includes all government information pertaining to individuals. Consequently, it may be difficult to determine which agencies might possess records regarding an individual.

Third and perhaps most importantly, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that an applicant must "reasonably describe" the records sought. A request that merely includes reference to an individual's name, without more, would not likely meet that standard. Rather, an appropriate request should include sufficient detail to enable the staff of an agency to locate and identify the records.

Lastly, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

While I am unaware of any details concerning your friend, I point out that §87(2)(b) authorizes an agency to withhold record insofar as disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." In most instances, individuals' home addresses may be withheld under that provision. An exception would involve voter registration records. When a person is registered to vote, a county board of elections is required to disclose his or name and residence address.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Pena:

I have received your letter of October 15, as well as the correspondence attached to it. The materials describe a series of delays by the Office of the Queens County District Attorney in dealing with your request for records under the Freedom of Information Law. The receipt of a request made on May 11 was acknowledged on June 8, with a statement that a response concerning the status of your request would be mailed to you within sixty days; a second letter was sent to you on June 29, stating that you would be notified of the result of the request within sixty days of the date of that letter; and on September 13, you were informed that you would be notified of the result of the request within thirty days. As of the date of your letter to this office, your request had been neither granted nor denied.

In this regard, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in relevant part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

It has been held that agency officials "did not conform to the mandates" of the provision quoted above "when they did not...furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of...requests along with a statement of the approximate date when action would be taken" [Newton v. Police Department, 585 NYS2d 5, 8, 183 AD2d 621 (1992), emphasis added].

In a case that described an experience that may be similar to yours, the court cited §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law and wrote that:

"The acknowledgement letters in this proceeding neither granted nor denied petitioner's request nor approximated a determination date. Rather, the letters were open ended as to time as they stated, 'that a period of time would be required to ascertain whether such documents do exist, and if they did, whether they qualify for inspection.

"This court finds that respondent's actions and/or inactions placed petitioner in a "Catch 22" position. The petitioner, relying on the respondent's representation, anticipated a determination to her request...this court finds that this petitioner should not be penalized for respondent's failure to comply with Public Officers Law §89 (3), especially when petitioner was advised by respondent that a decision concerning her application would be forthcoming.

It should also be noted that petitioner did not sit idle during this period but rather made numerous efforts to obtain a decision from respondent including the submission of a follow up letter to the Records Access Officer and submission of various requests for said records with the Department of Transportation" (Bernstein v. City of New York, Supreme Court, Supreme Court, New York County, November 7, 1990).

In Bernstein, the court determined that the agency "is stopped from asserting that this proceeding is improper due to petitioner's failure to appeal the denial of access to records within 30 days to the agency head, as provided in Public Officers Law, §89(4)(a)."

Based on the foregoing, I believe that your request has been constructively denied and that you may appeal the denial pursuant to §89(4)(a). That provision states in relevant part that:

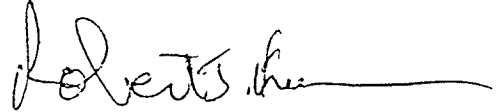

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reason for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Alternatively, based on the holding in Bernstein, it appears that you could seek judicial review of the denials now. I suggest, however, that you appeal in an effort to avoid the time and cost of litigation.

Mrs. Susan Crawford

Dear Ms. Crawford:

I have received your letter of October 18 concerning your efforts in gaining access to records of the AuSable Valley Central School District. In a memorandum addressed to you by Linda M. Fiacco, Superintendent, she wrote that I informed the District's attorney that "auditing worksheets from Management Advisory Group is [sic] not open to disclosure under FOIL." You have asked whether that statement correctly indicates what I said or wrote to the school district attorney."

In this regard, first, this office receives thousands of inquiries by phone each year. While I might have spoken with the District's attorney, I have no specific recollection of having had a conversation on the subject of your inquiry or having written to the attorney.

Second, if I had spoken with or written to the attorney, any District official, or any person, I do not believe that I would have responded as Ms. Fiacco suggested. On the contrary, I would have essentially offered the following remarks.

By way of brief background, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

It appears that the provision of primary significance in analyzing rights of access would be §87(2)(g). Although that provision potentially serves as a basis for denial of access, due to its structure, it often requires substantial disclosure. That provision enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

One of the contentions offered in a recent decision was that certain reports could be withheld because they are not final and because they relate to matters or incidents for which no final determination had been made. The state's highest court, the Court of Appeals, rejected that finding and stated that:

"...we note that one court has suggested that complaint follow-up reports are exempt from disclosure because they constitute nonfinal intra-agency material, irrespective of whether the information contained in the reports is 'factual data' (see, Matter of Scott v. Chief Medical Examiner, 179 AD2d 443, 444, supra [citing Public Officers Law §87(2)(g)] [111]). However, under a plain reading of §87(2)(g), the exemption for intra-agency material does not apply as long as the material falls within any one of the provision's four enumerated exceptions. Thus, intra-agency documents that contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' are subject to FOIL disclosure, whether or not embodied in a final agency policy or determination (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosp. Corp., 62 NY2d 75, 83, supra; Matter of MacRae v. Dolce, 130 AD2d 577)..." [Gould et al. v. New York City Police Department, 87 NY2d 267, 276 (1996)].

Moreover, in a decision rendered in 1981 dealing with field auditors' work papers, it was found that "[t]he major portions of these forms are, on their face, simply 'factual tabulations or data' as referred to in section 87 (sub 2, par [g], cl i) of the Public Officers Law and as such are not exempted from disclosure" [Polansky v. Regan, 81 AD2d 102, 104].

The Court of Appeals in Gould also dealt with the issue of what constitutes "factual data" that must be disclosed under §87(2)(g)(i). In its consideration of the matter, the Court found that: intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87[2][g][i]. Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182)" (id., 276-277).

Mrs. Susan Crawford

In sum, insofar as the records in question consist of statistical or factual information, I believe that they must be disclosed.

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of the Freedom of Information Law, copies of this opinion will be forwarded to District officials.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

P.O. Box 500
Elmira, NY 14902

Dear Mr. Brett:

I have received your letter of October 19 concerning "res judicata". You have asked whether an agency may deny a request for records on the ground that a denial of a previous request for "similar information" was sustained by the Supreme Court more than ten years ago, and whether the ruling has "a binding effect on any other requester who chooses to seek release of the same information."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the principle of "res judicata" pertains to a situation in which a court has rendered a determination and one or more of the parties seeks to initiate a second judicial proceeding. In that situation, a party could not seek a second judicial review of the same matter in which he or she was previously involved. As such, assuming that a person other than a party to a judicial proceeding seeks records similar to those that were the subject of the proceeding, the principle of "res judicata" would not apply.

Second, however, the initial decision may serve as precedent, and if indeed the records are so similar to those initially considered and there has been no change in the law or facts, the precedent might be viewed as binding.

Third, "similar" may not mean "same." On the basis of your letter, I am unaware of differences that might exist between the records determined to be deniable by the court and those that may be of your interest now. Moreover, it is possible that legislation enacted since the determination may require a different result. It is possible, too, that facts and circumstances may require a different result. For instance, disclosure of records compiled for law enforcement purposes might interfere with an active investigation and be withheld with justification under §87(2)(e)(i). However, after the investigation has ended, the same records might become available because disclosure would no longer interfere with an investigation. Records pertaining to an individual might be withheld on the ground that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" pursuant to §87(2)(b). Nevertheless, if that person has died, the exception may no longer be applicable. In short, the extent to which a judicial decision rendered ten years ago may have precedential effect is questionable.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Mark L. Balen

Dear Mr. Balen:

I have received your letter of October 19, as well as the materials attached to it.

In your capacity as a member of the Board of Education of the Lackawanna City School District, you have sought assistance concerning your efforts in obtaining various records, particularly a "break down of work periods showing whether employees worked or not and overtime received, if any", and those indicating "how much in District funds were spent" in relation to a certain grievance proceeding. In response to the request, you were informed that the records are "considered part of the employee's personnel records" and that the Commissioner's regulations "provide that any board member may request that personnel records be examined by the board in executive session, but only for inspection and use in the deliberation of specific matters before the board."

From my perspective, the Superintendent's statement concerning the use of the records by board members is somewhat overbroad. More importantly, however, I believe that the regulations are inconsistent with the Freedom of Information Law and are, therefore, invalid to the extent of such inconsistency. In short, under those regulations, a member of a board of education would apparently have a lesser right of access to items characterized as "personnel records" than the public generally. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law does not distinguish among applicants for records, and it has been held that when records are accessible under that statute, they must be made equally available to any person, notwithstanding one's status or interest [Burke v. Yudelson, 51 AD2d 673 (1976)]. When one seeks records under the Freedom of Information Law, that person enjoys rights accorded to the public generally [Farbman v. New York City, 62 NY2d 75 (1984)]. In the context of your inquiry, when you seek records under the Freedom of Information Law, I believe that you would have the same rights as any member of the public, despite your status as a member of the Board of Education.

Second, in brief, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Part 84 of the Commissioner's regulations, which deals with access to employees personnel records by boards of education and their members, provides as follows:

“§84.1 Right of access by school board members

A board of education shall have right of access to personnel records of employees of the district, subject to the procedures hereinafter set forth.

§84.2 Procedures to obtain access.

Examination of school employee personnel records by the board of education shall be conducted only at executive sessions of the board. Any board member may request the chief school officer to bring the personnel records of a designated employee or employees to an open meeting of the board. The board shall then determine whether to conduct an executive session for the purpose of examining such records. The chief school officer shall present such records to the board at the executive session. Such records shall, in their entirety, be returned to the custody of the chief school officer at the conclusion of the executive session of the board.

§84.3 Purposes and use.

Information obtained from employee personnel records by members of the board of education shall be used only for the purpose of aiding the members of the board to fulfill their legal responsibilities in making decisions in such employee personnel matters as appointments, assignments, promotions, demotions, remuneration, discipline, or dismissal, or to aid in the development and implementation of personnel policies, or such other uses as are necessary to enable the board to carry out legal responsibilities.”

According to judicial decisions, an agency's regulations may not render records deniable or confidential, unless there is a basis for so doing pursuant to one or more of the grounds for denial appearing in the Freedom of Information Law.

The first ground for denial in the Freedom of Information Law, §87 (2)(a), refers to records that may be characterized as confidential and enables an agency to withhold records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." A statute, based upon judicial interpretations of the Freedom of Information Law, is an act of the State Legislature or congress [see Sheehan v. city of Syracuse, 521 NYS 2d 207 (1987)], and it has been found that agencies' regulations are not equivalent of statutes for purposes of §87 (2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law [see Zuckerman v. NYS Board of Parole, 385 NYS 2d 811, 53 AD 2d 405 (1976); Morris v. Martin, Chairman of the State Board of Equalization and Assessment, 440 NYS 2d 365, 82 AD 2d 965, reversed 55 NY 2d 1026 (1982)]. Therefore, insofar as the Department's regulations render records or portions of records deniable in a manner inconsistent with the Freedom of Information Law or some other statute, those regulations would, in my opinion, be invalid. The regulations cannot operate, in my view, in a manner that provides you with fewer rights of access than the public at large.

Third, it is emphasized that there is nothing in the Freedom of Information Law that deals specifically with personnel records or personnel files. The nature and content of so-called personnel files may differ from one agency to another, and from one employee to another. In any case, neither the characterization of documents as "personnel records" nor their placement in personnel files would necessarily render those documents "confidential" or deniable under the Freedom of Information Law (see Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980). On the contrary, the contents of those documents serve as the relevant factors in determining the extent to which they are available or deniable under the Freedom of Information Law.

The provision of most significance concerning the kinds of items at issue is, in my view, §87(2)(b), which permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy".

While the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public officers employees. It is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public officers and employees are required to be more accountable than others. Further, with regard to records pertaining to those persons, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a their official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, supra; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977].

Based upon the foregoing, it is clear in my view that records reflective of payments to public employees must be made available, whether they pertain to overtime, or participation in work-related activities, for those records in my view are relevant to the performance of one's official duties. It is noted that one of the decisions cited above, Capital Newspapers v. Burns, supra, involved a request for records reflective of the days and dates of sick leave claimed by a particular municipal police officer. The Appellate Division found that those records must be disclosed, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. The decision indicates that the public has both economic and safety reasons for knowing whether public employees perform their duties when scheduled to do so. As such, attendance records, including those involving overtime work, are in my opinion clearly available, for they are relevant to the performance of public employees' official duties. Similarly, I believe that records reflective of payment of overtime must be disclosed, for the public has an economic interest in obtaining those records and because the records are relevant to the performance of public employees' official duties.

In affirming the Appellate Division decision in Capital Newspapers, the Court of Appeals found that:

"The Freedom of Information Law expresses this State's strong commitment to open government and public accountability and imposes a broad standard of disclosure upon the State and its agencies (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v New York City Health and Hosps. Corp., 62 NY 2d 75, 79). The statute, enacted in furtherance of the public's vested and inherent 'right to know', affords all citizens the means to obtain information concerning the day-to-day functioning of State and local government thus providing the electorate with sufficient information 'to make intelligent, informed choices with respect to both the direction and scope of governmental activities' and with an effective tool for exposing waste, negligence and abuse on the part of government officers" (Capital Newspapers v. Burns, supra, 565-566).

Based on the preceding analysis, it is clear in my view that payroll, attendance and similar records must be disclosed under the Freedom of Information Law.

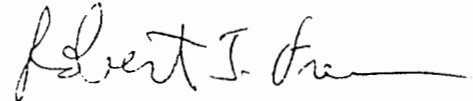

Lastly, with respect to records indicating amounts of District expenditures, insofar as those records exist, I believe that they must be disclosed, for none of the grounds for denial would be pertinent.

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of the Freedom of Information Law, copies of this response will be forwarded to the Board of Education and the Superintendent.

Dear Mr. Morrison:

I have received your letter of November 26 in which you requested records from this office pertaining to a person who may be under consideration for parole.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and guidance concerning public rights of access to government records, primarily under the state's Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not maintain records generally, and this office does not possess any records that you have requested. Nevertheless, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, a request for records should be made to the "records access officer" at the agency that you believe would maintain the records. The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests.

Second, the statutes to which you referred are the federal Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts, which apply only to records maintained by federal agencies. The applicable statute in this instance is the New York Freedom of Information Law, which applies to entities of state and local government in New York. That statute is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. While I am unaware of the contents of the records of your interest, it is likely that §87(2)(b) would be pertinent, for it enables an agency to withhold records insofar as disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

Lastly, since you indicated that you do not expect to be charged a fee, I note that the federal Freedom of Information Act includes provisions dealing with the waiver of fees, but that the state law contains no waiver provisions. Under that statute, an agency may charge up to twenty-five cents per photocopy.

Wallkill, NY 12589-0750

Dear Mr. Waite:

I have received your letter of October 18 and the materials attached to it. You have sought assistance concerning an unanswered request for records made to the Office of the Broome County District Attorney, and you "appealed" to this office.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions pertaining to the Freedom of Information Law; it is not empowered to determine appeals or otherwise compel an agency to grant or deny access. Nevertheless, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests and appeals. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

Mr. Stephen M. Waite, Sr.

December 2, 1999

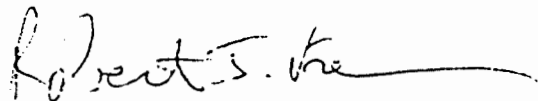

Page - 2 -

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Harvey M. Elentuck

Dear Mr. Elentuck:

I have received your note of October 16, which appears on an appeal addressed to Chancellor Rudolph F. Crew following a denial of a request for records directed to Community School District 2. As suggested in previous correspondence, some of the matters that you raised have been the subjects of opinions rendered in the past and will not be reconsidered.

One of the issues pertains to the absence of any expressed reason for withholding records. In this regard, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401) govern the procedural aspects of the Freedom of Information Law. Section 1401.2 (b)(3) states that an agency's records access officer is responsible for assuring that agency personnel make records available or "deny access to the records in whole or in part and explain in writing the reasons therefor." Based on the foregoing, the reasons for a denial of access must be stated in writing. This is not to suggest that any such reasons must be explained in an exhaustive manner. As you are aware, later in the process of seeking records, if an appeal is denied, §89(4)(a) provides that the reason must be "fully explain[ed] in writing."

Next, with respect to access to an employee's "6 - digit file number", without knowledge of the use of that identifier, I cannot offer unequivocal guidance. I note that §87(2)(i) of the Freedom of Information Law authorizes an agency to withhold "computer access codes". Based on its legislative history, that provision is intended to permit agencies to withhold access codes which if disclosed would provide the recipient of a code with the ability to gain unauthorized access to information. Insofar as disclosure would enable a person with the file number to gain access to information without the authority to do so, or to shift, add, delete or alter information, I believe that the number could justifiably be withheld. On the other hand, insofar as disclosure would not permit an individual to gain unauthorized access information or the ability to alter the information, §87(2)(i) would not likely be applicable.

Lastly, you asked whether “‘factual descriptions’ and ‘objective statements’ necessarily imply the existence of ‘statistical or factual tabulations or data’”. In short, I do not believe so. By means of example, as I type this response, I could include a factual statement, i.e., “I looked out the window and the sky was blue”, that in no way would imply the existence of written statistical or factual data needed to support my statement.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Riverview Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 247
Ogdensburg, NY 13669

Dear Mr. King:

I have received your letter of October 16 and the materials attached to it. You have complained that the Department of Correctional Services has not responded to your appeal in a timely manner and that portions of documentation indicating the reasons for your transfer were improperly withheld.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, with respect to the time for responding to an appeal, §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law states in relevant part that:

I note that it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Second, with respect to rights of access, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Of relevance to records relating to transfers is §87(2)(g), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

I point out that a decision rendered in 1989 might have dealt with the kinds of records concerning transfers in which you are interested. In that case, it was stated that:

"The petitioner seeks disclosure of unredacted portions of five Program Security and Assessment Summary forms, prepared semi-annually or upon the transfer of an inmate from one facility to another, which contain information to assist the respondents in determining the placement of the inmate in the most appropriate facility. The respondents claim that these documents are exempted from disclosure under the intra-agency memorandum exemption contained in the Freedom of Information Law (Public Officers Law, section 87[2][g]). We have examined in camera unredacted copies of the documents at issue (see Matter of Nalo v. Sullivan, 125 AD 2d 311, 509 NYS 2d 53; see also Matter of Allen Group, Inc. v. New York State Dept. of Motor Vehicles, App. Div., 538 NYS 2d 78), and find that they are exempted as intra-agency material, inasmuch as they contain predecisional evaluations, recommendations and conclusions concerning the petitioner's conduct in prison (see Matter of Kheel v. Ravitch, 62 NY 2d 1, 475 NYS 2d 814, 464 NE 2d 118; Matter of Town of Oyster Bay v. Williams, 134 AD 2d 267, 520 NYS 2d 599)"

[Rowland D. v. Scully, 543 NYS 2d 497, 498; 152 AD 2d 570

Insofar as the records sought are equivalent to those described in Rowland D., it appears that they could be withheld.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Fishkill Correctional Facility
Box 1245
Beacon, NY 12508

Dear Mr. Egan:

I have received your undated letter in which you sought guidance concerning the use of the Freedom of Information Law. Enclosed are copies of that statute and an explanatory brochure that may be useful to you.

It is noted that the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice regarding the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not maintain possession of records generally.

When seeking records, a request should be made to the "records access officer" at the agency that you believe maintains the records of your interest. The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests. Since one aspect of the records in which you are interested involves dates of time spent in New York City jails, I note that those institutions are part of the New York City Department of Correction. The records access officer for that agency is Mr. Thomas Antenen.

With respect to criminal history records, the general repository of those records is the Division of Criminal Justice Services. While the subject of a criminal history record may obtain such record from the Division, it has been held that criminal history records maintained by that agency are exempted from public disclosure pursuant to §87 (2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law [Capital Newspapers v. Poklemba, Supreme Court, Albany county, April 6, 1989]. Nevertheless, if, for example, criminal conviction records were used in conjunction with a criminal proceeding by a district attorney, it has been held that the district attorney must disclose those records [see Thompson v. Weinstein, 150 AD 2d 782 (1989)].

It is noted that it has been reconfirmed that criminal history records are, in general, exempt from disclosure [Woods v. Kings County District Attorney's Office, 234 AD 2d 554 (1996)]. In Woods, the court upheld that a denial of a request for the rap sheets "of numerous individuals who were not witnesses at [the petitioner's] trial." However, it distinguished its determination from the holding in Thompson, supra, in which it has found that a rap sheet must be disclosed when the request is "limited to the criminal convictions and any pending criminal actions against an individual call by the People as a witness in the petitioner's criminal trial." Therefore, insofar as your request involves records analogous to those found to be available in Thompson, I believe that the District Attorney would be required to disclose.

Finally, it is also noted that while records relating to convictions may be available from the courts or other sources, when charges are dismissed in favor of an accused, records relating to arrests that did not result in convictions are generally sealed pursuant to §160.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Green Haven Correctional Facility
Drawer B
Stormville, NY 12582

Dear Mr. Ramos:

I have received your letter of October 18. You have asked whether you have the right under the Freedom of Information Law to obtain the date of a burglary that occurred at a particular location and the name of the investigating officer.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, a request should be directed to the "records access officer" at the New York City Police Department. The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests. I note, too, that §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that an applicant "reasonably describe" the records sought. Therefore, a request should contain sufficient detail to enable Department staff to locate and identify the records of your interest.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, the only circumstances in which records containing the information sought would not be available would involve situations in which they have been sealed. If, for example, charges against a person are later dismissed in his favor, the records would be sealed pursuant to §160.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law; if the records related to a juvenile, the records would likely be exempt from disclosure under §784 of the Family Court Act. In either of those instances, §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, which pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by....statute", would authorize the Department to deny the request.

Mr. Hilberto Ramos

December 3, 1999

If the records have not been sealed, I believe that they would be available, for none of the remaining grounds for denial would appear to be applicable.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. William V. Camfield

Dear Mr. Camfield:

I have received your letter of October 25. In brief, you complained with respect to ongoing delays in your efforts in gaining access to records of the Town of Stillwater.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in relevant part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

It has been held that agency officials "did not conform to the mandates" of the provision quoted above "when they did not...furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of...requests along with a statement of the approximate date when action would be taken" [Newton v. Police Department, 585 NYS2d 5, 8, 183 AD2d 621 (1992), emphasis added].

In a case that described an experience that may be similar to yours, the court cited §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law and wrote that:

"The acknowledgement letters in this proceeding neither granted nor denied petitioner's request nor approximated a determination date. Rather, the letters were open ended as to time as they stated, 'that a period of time would be required to ascertain whether such documents do exist, and if they did, whether they qualify for inspection.

"This court finds that respondent's actions and/or inactions placed petitioner in a "Catch 22" position. The petitioner, relying on the respondent's representation, anticipated a determination to her request...this court finds that this petitioner should not be penalized for respondent's failure to comply with Public Officers Law §89 (3), especially when petitioner was advised by respondent that a decision concerning her application would be forthcoming.

It should also be noted that petitioner did not sit idle during this period but rather made numerous efforts to obtain a decision from respondent including the submission of a follow up letter to the Records Access Officer and submission of various requests for said records with the Department of Transportation" (Bernstein v. City of New York, Supreme Court, Supreme Court, New York County, November 7, 1990).

In Bernstein, the court determined that the agency "is stopped from asserting that this proceeding is improper due to petitioner's failure to appeal the denial of access to records within 30 days to the agency head, as provided in Public Officers Law, §89(4)(a)."

Based on the foregoing, when an applicant for records encounters delays analogous to those that you described, a request may be considered to have been constructively denied and that person may appeal the denial pursuant to §89(4)(a). That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reason for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Alternatively, based on the holding in Bernstein, an applicant could seek judicial review of the denial. It has been suggested, however, that applicants appeal in an effort to avoid the time and cost of litigation.

Lastly, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

Mr. William V. Camfield

December 3, 1999

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Room 625
Legislative Office Building
Albany, NY 12248

Dear Mr. Parker:

As you are aware, I have received your recent letter in which you sought assistance in relation to unanswered requests for records maintained by Westchester County.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied [see DeCorse v. City of Buffalo, 239 AD2d 949, 950 (1997)]. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

Mr. John L. Parker
December 3, 1999

who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

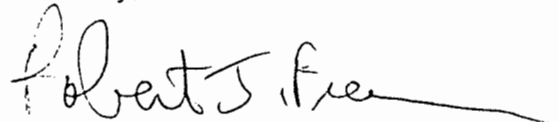

For your information, I believe that the Westchester County Attorney has been designated to determine appeals.

Lastly, from my perspective, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. Dear Mr. Serrano:

I have received your letter of October 25. You have asked whether your wife may go to a hospital to obtain copies of your medical records relating to an operation performed at that hospital.

In this regard, under §18 of the Public Health Law, only "qualified persons" have the right to obtain medical records. As the patient, you are a qualified person. From my perspective, if you write to the hospital, providing proof of your identity and direction to make records available to your wife, if she presents proof of her identity and authorization from you, I believe that she should have the ability to obtain the records on your behalf.

I note that a hospital or physician may withhold medical records to the extent that disclosure to the patient would cause "substantial and identifiable harm" to the patient or others, or if the records contain privileged doctors' notes. Subdivisions (3) and (4) of §18 provide the right to appeal a denial of access for those reasons.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Mr. Campbell:

I have received a copy of your appeal to Anthony J. Annucci, Counsel to the Department of Correctional Services, concerning a denial of your request for records containing the "business and post office address for CPS, and the name(s) of CPS contact person(s), including executive officer(s)..." CPS, according to your letter, is Correction Physician Services, Inc., which you described as a "non-traditional managed health care plan and/or doctors' group." At the end of the appeal you indicated that a copy would be sent to me for the purpose of seeking assistance.

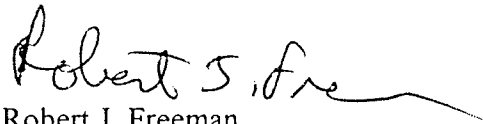

In this regard, the issue in my view involves the extent to which the Department maintains records that contain the information sought. If such records exist, I believe that they would be accessible, for none of the grounds for a denial of access appearing in §87(2) of the Freedom of Information Law would be applicable. I note, however, that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. Insofar as the Department does not maintain the information sought in a record or records, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

Lastly, since you referred to the "potential assessment of attorney's fees", I point out that a court must find that the records that should have been disclosed by an agency must be of "clearly significant interest to the general public" before it may consider an award of attorney's fees. I would conjecture that that condition would not be met in this instance.

Mr. Vilair Fonvil

Dear Mr. Fonvil:

I have received your letter of October 26 in which you sought assistance concerning delays that you have encountered in your efforts in gaining access to records of the Village of Spring Valley.

In this regard, time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Notwithstanding the foregoing, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

If a request is voluminous and a significant amount of time is needed to locate records and review them to determine rights of access, a delay beyond five business days, might be reasonable. On the other hand, if a record or report is clearly public and can be found easily, there would appear to be no rational basis for delaying disclosure. In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

As you requested, in an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of the Freedom of Information Law, copies of this opinion will be forwarded to Village officials.

Ms. Carol A. Bogle
Senior Assistant District Attorney
Dutchess County
22 Market Street
Poughkeepsie, NY 12601

Dear Ms. Bogle:

I have received your letter of October 27 in which you sought my views concerning a request made under the Freedom of Information Law. The matter relates to "response times for emergency vehicles in Dutchess County", and you have asked whether the County may "withhold the name, address or phone number of the person who needs the emergency vehicle based on personal privacy or any other reason."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in section 87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Further, the introductory language of §87(2) refers to the authority to withhold "records or portions thereof" that fall within the scope of the grounds for denial that follow. The phrase quoted in the preceding sentence indicates that a single record or report may contain both accessible and deniable information. Moreover, that phrase in my opinion imposes an obligation upon agencies to review requested records in their entirety to determine which portions, if any, may justifiably be withheld.

Second, as you suggested, pertinent is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which states that an agency may withhold records or portions thereof that:

"if disclosed would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under the provisions of subdivision two of section eighty-nine of this article...."

In addition, §89(2)(b) lists a series of examples of unwarranted invasions of personal privacy, the first two of which pertain to:

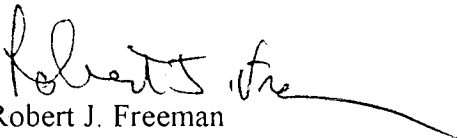

- "i. disclosure of employment, medical or credit histories or personal references or applicants for employment;
- ii. disclosure of items involving the medical or personal records of a client or patient in a medical facility..."

From my perspective, a record of a medical emergency call consists in great measure of what might be characterized as a medical record or history relating to the person needing care or service (see Hanig v. NYS Department of Motor Vehicles, 79 NY 2d 106 (1992)).

In my opinion, portions of records identifying those to whom medical services were rendered, their ages, and descriptions of their medical problems or conditions could be withheld on the ground that disclosure would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, for disclosure of a name coupled with those details in my view represents a personal and somewhat intimate event in the individual's life. However, I believe that other aspects of the records, such as the locations of calls or addresses, should be disclosed. In my view, an emergency call, particularly when sirens or flashing lights are used, is an event of a public nature. When a fire truck or ambulance travels to its destination, that destination is or can be known to those in the vicinity of the event. In essence, I believe that event is of a public nature and that disclosure of an address or a brief description of an event would not likely constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Nevertheless, personally identifiable details, such as a name, a home telephone number, or medical information could in my view be withheld.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Harry C. Kuntzleman

Dear Mr. Kuntzleman:

I have received your note in which you complained that the Broome-Tioga BOCES had failed to respond to your request for records and your appeal.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests and appeals. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Mr. Harry C. Kuntzleman

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note as a general matter that the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Insofar as the records sought exist and can be located with reasonable effort, those dealing with "computer system costs" relating to a particular school district, I believe that they would be available. In short, none of the grounds for denial would appear to be pertinent or applicable.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Andre Lopez
98-A-5526
Green Haven Correctional Facility
Route 216
Stormville, NY 12582

Dear Mr. Lopez:

I have received your letter of December 13 in which you requested certain court records from this office under the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law; the Committee does not maintain possession or control of records generally. In short, I cannot provide the records of your interest because this agency does not possess them.

I note further that the Freedom of Information Law is applicable to agency records, and that §86(3) defines the term "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

In turn, §86(1) defines the term "judiciary" to mean:

"the courts of the state, including any municipal or district court, whether or not of record."

Based on the provisions quoted above, the courts and court records are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law. This is not to suggest that court records are not generally available to the public, for other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255) may grant broad public access to those records. Even though other statutes may deal with access to court records, the procedural provisions associated with the Freedom of Information Law (i.e., those involving the designation of a records access officer or the right to appeal a denial) would not ordinarily be applicable.

It is suggested that you resubmit your request to the clerk of the court, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for your request.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Stuart Milgrim
Birchwood on the Green of East
Meadow Civic Association
132 Norman Drive
East Meadow, NY 11554

Dear Mr. Milgrim:

I have received your letter of October 28 and the materials attached to it. According to the correspondence, the Birchwood on the Green of East Meadow Civic Association requested various records relating to Masters Auto Collision from the Town of Hempstead, but the Town has not responded. The records sought include those pertaining to Masters maintained by the Town Attorney and the Building Department, as well as summonses issued since 1980.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, I note that the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401) require that each agency designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating the agency's response to requests, and requests should ordinarily be made to that person. While I believe that the Supervisor should have responded to your request in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law or forwarded the request to the proper person or persons, in the future, it is suggested that your requests be made to the designated records access officer.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Third, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

I am unaware of the nature of the records maintained by the Town Attorney or the Building Department. With respect to the former, it is possible that some of the records might properly be withheld. Here I point out that the first ground for denial in the Freedom of Information Law, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." The courts have found that legal advice given by a municipal attorney to his or her clients, municipal officials, is privileged when it is prepared in conjunction with an attorney-client relationship [see e.d., People ex rel. Updyke v. Gilon, and Pennock v. Lane, supra, Bernkrant v. City Rent and Rehabilitation Administration, 242 NYS 2d 752 (1963), aff'd 17 App. Div. 2d 392]. As such, I believe that a municipal attorney may engage in a privileged relationship with his or her client and that records prepared in conjunction with an attorney-client relationship are considered privileged under §4503 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules. Further, since the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law, it has also found that records may be withheld when the privilege can appropriately be asserted when the attorney-client privilege is read in conjunction with §87(2)(a) of the Law [see e.g., Mid-Boro Medical Group v. New York City Department of Finance, Sup. Ct., Bronx Cty., NYLJ, December 7, 1979; Steele v. NYS Department of Health, 464 NY 2d 925 (1983)]. Similarly, material prepared for litigation may be confidential under §3101 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules.

Nevertheless, legal papers filed against the Town would not have been prepared by the Town, its officials or its agents. As such, in my opinion, those papers would not be subject to the attorney-client privilege. For similar reasons, litigation papers served by the Town on an adversary or filed with a court would be outside the scope of the attorney-client privilege. In general, when those papers are made available to the Town's adversary, I believe that they become a matter of public record. Moreover, although the Freedom of Information Law does not apply to the courts and court records, such records are generally available under other provisions of law [see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255]. From my perspective, if the records sought are publicly available from a court, they would also be available under the Freedom of Information Law from the Town.

With respect to summonses and similar records, when a person or entity has been found to have engaged in a violation of law, those records would be available, for none of the grounds for denial would apply. I note that there may be a distinction in terms of rights of access between those situations in which a person has been found to have engaged in a violation of law, and those in which charges against an individual have been dismissed in his or her favor. In the latter case, records relating to an event that did not result in a conviction ordinarily become sealed pursuant to §160.50 or perhaps other provisions of the Criminal Procedure Law. However, if it is determined that a person has engaged in a violation, i.e., of the building code, the records would be available from the Town or from the court in which the proceeding occurred, such as a Justice Court (see Uniform Justice Court Act, §2019-a) or District Court. Further, the Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, determined in 1984 that traffic tickets issued and lists of violations of the Vehicle and Traffic Law compiled by the State Police during a certain period in a county must be disclosed, unless charges were dismissed and the records sealed pursuant to provisions of the Criminal Procedure Law [see Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 61 NY2d 958].

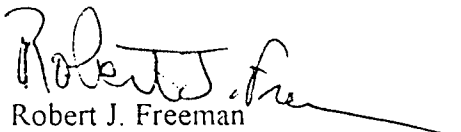

Although that decision did not pertain to the kinds of records to which you referred, I believe that the principle would be applicable in this instance. In short, unless they have been sealed pursuant to statute, records indicating violations of law would in my opinion be accessible.

Lastly, since the records sought may involve events occurring nearly twenty years ago, it is questionable whether all of them continue to exist or the extent to which older records can be located with reasonable effort. Insofar as the records sought no longer exist or cannot be found, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

In an effort to enhance compliance with the Freedom of Information Law, a copy of this opinion will be forwarded to the Town Supervisor.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Hill:

I have received your letter of October 24 in which you referred to your unsuccessful attempts to obtain records from the Office of the Erie County District Attorney and the City of Buffalo Police Department. The records sought involve descriptions of clothing at the time of your arrest.

In this regard, first, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

I have received your letter of October 22 in which you complained that a request for records made to your facility was not answered.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

Ms. Mary Beth Pfeiffer
Projects Editor
Poughkeepsie Journal
P.O. Box 1231
85 Civic Center Plaza
Poughkeepsie, NY 12602

Dear Ms. Pfeiffer:

I have received your letter of October 28 and the materials attached to it. You have sought an advisory opinion concerning a denial of your request for records reflective of disciplinary action taken by the Town of Poughkeepsie against Deputy Town Attorney Cynthia Kasnia. The request was denied by the Town Attorney "due to the fact that the matter involves a personnel matter and also constitutes an unwarranted invasion of privacy."

From my perspective, insofar as records indicate a finding of misconduct or the nature of a penalty imposed, they must be made available. That the issue involves a personnel matter is not determinative. As suggested in the ensuing paragraphs, the courts have found that the contents of personnel records are the factors that determine the extent to which those records must be disclosed. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

By way of background, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, two of the grounds for denial are relevant in consideration of rights of access to the records in question.

Relevant to an analysis is §87(2)(b), which permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". While the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public officers employees. It is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public officers and employees are required to be more accountable than others. With regard to records pertaining to public officers and employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a their official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, supra; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977].

The other ground for denial of significance, §87(2)(g), states that an agency may withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld. Insofar as a request involves final agency determinations, I believe that those determinations must be disclosed, again, unless a different ground for denial could be asserted.

In terms of the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, it is emphasized that in situations in which allegations or charges have resulted in the issuance of a written reprimand, disciplinary action, or findings that public employees have engaged in misconduct, records reflective of those kinds of determinations have been found to be available, including the names of those who are the subjects of disciplinary action [see Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); also Farrell, Geneva Printing, Scaccia and Sinicropi, supra]. Three of the decisions cited above, Powhida, Farrell and Scaccia involved police officers, and in each case, the names of the officers were determined to be public.

Other decisions have dealt with settlements reached following the initiation of disciplinary proceedings. In Geneva Printing, supra, a public employee charged with misconduct and in the process of an arbitration hearing engaged in a settlement agreement with a municipality. One aspect of the settlement was an agreement to the effect that its terms would remain confidential. Notwithstanding the agreement of confidentiality, which apparently was based on an assertion that "the public interest is benefited by maintaining harmonious relationships between government and its employees", the court found that no ground for denial could justifiably be cited to withhold the agreement. On the contrary, it was determined that:

"the citizen's right to know that public servants are held accountable when they abuse the public trust outweighs any advantage that would accrue to municipalities were they able to negotiate disciplinary matters with its employee with the power to suppress the terms of any settlement".

It was also found that the record indicating the terms of the settlement constituted a final agency determination available under the Law. The decision states that:

"It is the terms of the settlement, not just a notation that a settlement resulted, which comprise the final determination of the matter. The public is entitled to know what penalty, if any, the employee suffered...The instant records are the decision or final determination of the village, albeit arrived at by settlement..."

In another more recent decision involving a settlement agreement between a school district and a teacher, it was held in Anonymous v. Board of Education [616 NYS 2d 867 (1994)] that:

"...it is disingenuous for petitioner to argue that public disclosure is permissible...only where an employee is found guilty of a specific charge. The settlement agreement at issue in the instant case contains the petitioner's express admission of guilt to a number of charges and specifications. This court does not perceive the distinction between a finding of guilt after a hearing and an admission of guilt insofar as protection from disclosure is concerned" (id., 870).

As suggested by the Court in Anonymous, there is no distinction in substance between a finding of guilt after a hearing and an admission of guilt as a means of avoiding such a proceeding. The same decision also referred to contentions involving privacy as follows:

"Petitioner contends that disclosure of the terms of the settlement at issue in this case would constitute an unwarranted invasion of his privacy prohibited by Public Officers Law § 87(2)(b). Public Officers Law § 89(2)(b) defines an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as, in pertinent part, '(i) disclosure of employment, medical or credit histories or personal references of applicants for employment.' Petitioner argues that the agreement itself provides that it shall become part of his personnel file and that material in his personnel file is exempt from disclosure..." (id.).

In response to those contentions, the decision stated that:

"This court rejects that conclusion as establishing an exemption from disclosure not created by statute (Public Officers Law § 87[2][a]), and not within the contemplation of the 'employment, medical or credit history' language found under the definition of 'unwarranted invasion of personal privacy' at Public Officers Law § 89(2)(b)(i). In fact, the information sought in the instant case, i.e., the terms of settlement of charges of misconduct lodged against a teacher by the Board of Education, is not information in which petitioner has any reasonable expectation of privacy where the agreement contains the teacher's admission to much of the misconduct charged. The agreement does not contain details of the petitioner's personal history-but it does contain the details of admitted misconduct toward students, as well as the agreed penalty. The information is clearly of significant interest to the public, insofar as it is a final determination and disposition of matters within the work of the Board of Education and reveals the process of and basis for government decision-making. This is not a case where petitioner is to be protected from possible harm to his professional reputation from unfounded accusations (Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Melino, 77 N.Y.2d 1, 563 N.Y.S.2d 380, 564 N.E.2d 1046), for this court regards the petitioner's admission to the conduct described in the agreement as the equivalent of founded accusations. As such, the agreement is tantamount to a final agency determination not falling within the privacy exemption of FOIL 'since it was not a disclosure of employment history.'" (id., 871).

Most recently, in LaRocca v. Board of Education of Jericho Union Free School District [632 NYS 2d 576 (1995)], the Appellate Division held that a settlement agreement was available insofar as it included admissions of misconduct. In that case, charges were initiated under §3020-a of the Education Law, but were later "disposed of by negotiation and settled by an Agreement" (id., 577) and withdrawn. The court rejected claims that the record could be characterized as an employment history that could be withheld as an unwarranted invasion of privacy, and found that a confidentiality agreement was invalid. Specifically, it was stated that:

"Having examined the settlement agreement, we find that the entire document does not constitute an 'employment history' as defined by FOIL (see, Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, supra) and it is therefore presumptively available for public inspection (see, Public Officers Law § 87[2]; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health and Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d 75, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437). Moreover, as a matter of public policy, the Board of Education cannot bargain away the public's right of access to public records (see, Board of Educ., Great Neck Union Free School Dist. v. Areman, 41 N.Y.2d 527, 394 N.Y.S.2d 143, 362 N.E.2d 943)" (id., 578, 579).

In contrast, when allegations or charges of misconduct have not yet been determined or did not result in disciplinary action or a finding of misconduct, the records relating to such allegations may, in my view, be withheld, for disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Herald Company v. School District of City of Syracuse, 430 NYS 2d 460 (1980)]. Similarly, to the extent that charges are dismissed or allegations are found to be without merit, I believe that they may be withheld. As stated earlier, the records in this instance do not involve mere allegations. The facts of the matter are undisputed, admissions have been made, and disciplinary action has been or will be taken.

It is emphasized the courts have consistently interpreted the Freedom of Information Law in a manner that fosters maximum access. As stated by the Court of Appeals more than a decade ago:

"To be sure, the balance is presumptively struck in favor of disclosure, but in eight specific, narrowly constructed instances where the governmental agency convincingly demonstrates its need, disclosure will not be ordered (Public Officers Law, section 87, subd 2). Thus, the agency does not have carte blanche to withhold any information it pleases. Rather, it is required to articulate particularized and specific justification and, if necessary, submit the requested materials to the court for in camera inspection, to exempt its records from disclosure (see Church of Scientology of N.Y. v. State of New York, 46 NY 2d 906, 908). Only where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld" [Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 NY 2d 567, 571 (1979)].

In a decision that was cited earlier, the Court of Appeals found that:

"The Freedom of Information Law expresses this State's strong commitment to open government and public accountability and imposes a broad standard of disclosure upon the State and its agencies (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v New York City Health and Hosps. Corp., 62 NY 2d 75, 79). The statute, enacted in furtherance of the public's vested and inherent 'right to know', affords all citizens the means to obtain information concerning the day-to-day functioning of State and local government thus providing the electorate with sufficient information 'to make intelligent, informed choices with respect to both the direction and scope of governmental activities' and with an effective tool for exposing waste, negligence and abuse on the part of government officers" (Capital Newspapers v. Burns, supra, 565-566).

Ms. Mary Beth Pfeiffer

For the reasons described above, it is my opinion that records indicating the nature of disciplinary action or sanction imposed against the person in question must be disclosed.

Lastly, I note that the denial of your request by the Town Attorney failed to refer to your right to appeal. The provision dealing with the right to appeal, §89(4)(a), states in relevant part that:

"any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

Further, the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), which govern the procedural aspects of the Law, state that:

"(a) The governing body of a public corporation or the head, chief executive or governing body of other agencies shall hear appeals or shall designate a person or body to hear appeals regarding denial of access to records under the Freedom of Information Law.

(b) Denial of access shall be in writing stating the reason therefor and advising the person denied access of his or her right to appeal to the person or body established to hear appeals, and that person or body shall be identified by name, title, business address and business telephone number. The records access officer shall not be the appeals officer" (§1401.7).

It is also noted that the state's highest court has held that a failure to inform a person denied access to records of the right to appeal enables that person to seek judicial review of a denial. Citing the Committee's regulations and the Freedom of Information Law, the Court of Appeals in Barrett v. Morgenthau held that:

Ms. Mary Beth Pfeiffer

"[i]nasmuch as the District Attorney failed to advise petitioner of the availability of an administrative appeal in the office (see, 21 NYCRR 1401.7[b]) and failed to demonstrate in the proceeding that the procedures for such an appeal had, in fact, even been established (see, Public Officers Law [section] 87[1][b], he cannot be heard to complain that petitioner failed to exhaust his administrative remedies" [74 NY 2d 907, 909 (1989)].

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of the Freedom of Information Law, copies of this opinion will be forwarded to Town officials.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Thomas W. O'Connell

Dear Mr. O'Connell:

I have received your letter of October 15, which reached this office on October 27. You have asked whether officials of the Town of Farmington should, in my opinion, supply the information that you have requested.

In this regard, first, having reviewed your requests, as you may be aware, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and §89 (3) states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request for information. Similarly, an agency is not required to provide "information" in response to questions; its obligation is to provide access to existing records to the extent required by law. Therefore, if, for instance, there is no record specifying the reasons for a reduction in an assessment, the Town would not be obliged to prepare a new record on your behalf. In short, you requested "information" rather than records. In the future, rather than seeking to elicit information, it is suggested that you request existing records, and if you have not yet received the information sought, it is suggested that you resubmit your requests and seek records rather than information.

Second, I note that the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401) require that each agency, such as a town, designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests. While I believe that the persons in receipt of your requests should have responded directly in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law or forwarded the request to the records access officer, in the future, it is recommended that requests be made to an agency's designated records access officer. In most towns, the records access officer is the town clerk.

Third, when a proper request is made, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Lastly, to the extent that the information sought exists in the form of a record or records, it appears that it would be available. In brief, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, it does not appear that any of the grounds for denial would be pertinent.

Mr. William R. Phillips
75-A-0322
Auburn Correctional Facility
135 State Street
Auburn, NY 13021

Dear Mr. Phillips:

I have received your letter of October 26, as well as the materials attached to it. You have complained that a letter sent by the Office of the New York County District Attorney to the Parole Board recommending that you not be granted parole was withheld.

From my perspective, it appears that the denial of access was consistent with law. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

When one agency, such as the office of a district attorney, communicates in writing with another, such as the Parole Board, the communication constitutes "inter-agency material" that falls within one of the exceptions, §87(2)(g). That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or

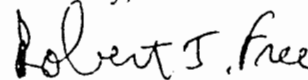

Mr. William R. Phillips

iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

I hope that the foregoing serves to clarify your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Julio Cesar Borrell

Sullivan Correctional Facility
P.O. Box AG
Fallsburg, NY 12733-0116

Dear Mr. Borrell:

I have received your letter of October 26 in which you sought an opinion concerning whether your jail is required to disclose its records pertaining to you. You referred to documents that "can shed light into why [your] outgoing mail disappears", and you wrote that you have "reason to believe that the office of the Queens county district attorney may be behind this in trying to keep [you] from reaching people that would help [you] in [your] legal situation..."

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. I am unaware of the nature or contents of the records in which you are interested or the extent to which they exist. Consequently, I cannot offer unequivocal guidance. Nevertheless, several grounds for denial may be pertinent to the matter, and they will be considered in the following paragraphs.

Of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Perhaps the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is section 87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii" identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

The remaining ground for denial of likely relevance is §87(2)(g). The cited provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government... "

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial applies. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Mr. Mark Freedman

Dear Mr. Freedman:

I have received your letter of October 31 in which you sought my opinion concerning whether a delay by the Town of Ghent would be inconsistent with the Freedom of Information Law.

According to the correspondence attached to your letter, you requested "[a]ll building permits and certificate of occupancies issued by Mr. Rich Kring when he was the building inspector for the Town of Ghent." In response to the request, the Town's records access officer indicated that "the current building inspector is in the process of trying to organize those records, which is probably going to take several months..." He added that the request could be expedited if you are interested in a "particular time period or person."

From my perspective, the issue involves the extent to which the request "reasonably describes" the records sought as required by §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law. I point out that it has been held by the Court of Appeals that to deny a request on the ground that it fails to reasonably describe the records, an agency must establish that "the descriptions were insufficient for purposes of locating and identifying the documents sought" [Konigsberg v. Coughlin, 68 NY 2d 245, 249 (1986)].

The Court in Konigsberg found that the agency could not reject the request due to its breadth and also stated that:

"respondents have failed to supply any proof whatsoever as to the nature - or even the existence - of their indexing system: whether the Department's files were indexed in a manner that would enable the identification and location of documents in their possession (cf. National Cable Tel. Assn. v Federal Communications Commn., 479 F2d 183, 192 [Bazon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under

F2d 183, 192 [Bazelon, J.] [plausible claim of nonidentifiability under Federal Freedom of Information Act, 5 USC section 552 (a) (3), may be presented where agency's indexing system was such that 'the requested documents could not be identified by retracing a path already trodden. It would have required a wholly new enterprise, potentially requiring a search of every file in the possession of the agency']" (id. at 250).

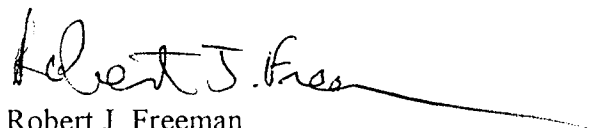

In my view, whether a request reasonably describes the records sought, as suggested by the Court of Appeals, may be dependent upon the terms of a request, as well as the nature of an agency's filing or record-keeping system. In Konigsberg, it appears that the agency was able to locate the records on the basis of an inmate's name and identification number.

While I am unfamiliar with the recordkeeping systems of the Town, to extent that the records sought can be located with reasonable effort, I believe that the request would have met the requirement of reasonably describing the records. On the other hand, if the records are not maintained in a manner that permits their retrieval except by reviewing perhaps hundreds or even thousands of records individually in an effort to locate those falling within the scope of the request, to that extent, the request would not in my opinion meet the standard of reasonably describing the records.

If, for instance, building permits and certificates of occupancy are filed chronologically, it may be relatively easy to locate the records falling within the scope of your request, and a delay of months would, in my opinion, be inconsistent with the Freedom of Information Law. However, if the records in question are maintained by parcel or address, records regarding every parcel would have to be reviewed in order to locate the records. In that latter situation, the request would not likely meet the standard of reasonably describing the records. If that is so, the Town would not be obliged to engage a search of that nature.

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the Freedom of Information Law and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Michael A. Kless

Dear Mr. Kless:

I have received your letter of October 28 and the materials attached to it. You have complained that the City of Buffalo Municipal Civil Service Commission does not record "who voted which way."

In this regard, §87(3)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that each agency, which includes a municipal commission, "shall maintain....a record of the final vote of each member in every proceeding in which the member votes." As such, in any instance in which a final vote is taken by the Commission, a record must be prepared, i.e., minutes of the meeting, indicating how each member cast his or her vote.

From my perspective, if the minutes indicate that action was taken, the only situation in which each member would have to be identified with his or her vote would involve the case in which the action is not unanimous. If the vote is unanimous, there would be no need, in my view, to record, by name, how each member voted.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. John Owen

Office of Hearings and Mediation Services, Rm. 423
Albany, New York 12233-1550

Dear Mr. Owen:

I have received your determination of an appeal made under the Freedom of Information Law by Mr. Alan Wechsler of the Albany Times-Union. In the determination, you denied his request for the names, job titles, division and unit of employees of the Department of Environmental Conservation who were vaccinated to prevent lyme disease. You wrote that:

“POL §87(2)(b) provides for exemption from disclosure of records which if released would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy and POL §96(92)(b) [sic] provides exemption from disclosure of...medical records where such disclosure is not required by law. A ‘medical record’ is simply any memorialization of information resulting from ‘attending a patient in a professional capacity’. (See CPLR 4504(a)).”

I respectfully disagree with your determination, and, in this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, while I am not fully familiar with the lyme disease vaccination program, I do not believe that the employees vaccinated could be characterized as “patients” as that term is commonly used. Those individuals were not being treated for any disease or symptom; on the contrary, as I understand the matter, it is more likely that being vaccinated was essentially a condition of employment. In my view, the vaccination program represents one of innumerable situations in which public employees may be required to take certain precautions in conjunction with the performance of their duties. For instance, if special clothing is distributed to certain employees to enable them to carry out their duties more safely and efficiently, I do not believe that there would be a basis for withholding information equivalent to that sought by Mr. Wechsler. If, in order to be a police officer, a physician may measure individuals to determine whether they meet a height qualification. Nevertheless, I do not believe that the disclosure of the officers’ identities could be characterized as a violation of the physician-patient privilege. Again, the identity of those vaccinated would not indicate any medical condition; rather, participation in the vaccination program appears to be a condition of employment. In a different context, children cannot attend public school unless they are vaccinated. Does that fact in and of itself constitute patient information that falls within the scope of the physician-patient privilege? In my opinion, it does not.

Second, assuming that the record sought could not be characterized as patient information, I do not believe that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." It is emphasized in this regard that the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of the official duties of a public officer or employee are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that items relating to public officers or employees are irrelevant to the performance of their official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977, dealing with membership in a union; Minerva v. Village of Valley Stream, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., May 20, 1981, involving the back of a check payable to a municipal attorney that could indicate how that person spends his/her money; Selig v. Sielaff, 200 AD 2d 298 (1994), concerning disclosure of social security numbers].

In this situation, participation in the lyme disease program is, in my opinion, clearly relevant to the performance of the employees' duties. Consequently, I do not believe that the records could be withheld based upon a contention that disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. On the contrary, for the reasons described above, I believe that the records must be disclosed, and I ask that you reconsider your determination.

If you would like to discuss the matter, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Archer:

I have received your letter of October 28 in which you sought assistance concerning an unanswered request for records made to the Oneida County Correction Department. Having reviewed your correspondence, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. If I understand your request correctly, it appears that some of the records sought, notably those relating to police or correction officers, may be withheld.

The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." One such statute is §50-a of the Civil Rights Law. In brief, that statute provides that personnel records of police and correction officers that are used to evaluate performance toward continued employment or promotion are confidential. The Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, in reviewing the legislative history leading to its enactment, has held that the exemption from disclosure conferred by §50-a of the Civil Rights Law "was designed to limit access to said personnel records by criminal defense counsel, who used the contents of the records, including unsubstantiated and irrelevant complaints against officers, to embarrass officers during cross-examination" [Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY2d 562, 568 (1986)]. In another decision which dealt with unsubstantiated complaints against correction officers, the Court of Appeals held that the purpose of §50-a "was to prevent the release of sensitive personnel records that could be used in litigation for purposes of harassing or embarrassing correction officers" [Prisoners' Legal Services v. NYS Department of Correctional Services, 73 NY 2d 26, 538 NYS 2d 190, 191 (1988)]. The Court in an opinion rendered earlier this year reiterated its view of §50-a, citing that decision and stating that:

"...we recognized that the decisive factor in determining whether an officer's personnel record was exempted from FOIL disclosure under Civil Rights Law § 50-a was the potential use of the information contained therein, not the specific purpose of the particular individual requesting access, nor whether the request was actually made in contemplation of litigation.

'Documents pertaining to misconduct or rules violations by corrections officers – which could well be used in various ways against the officers – are the very sort of record which  was intended to be kept confidential.  The legislative purpose underlying section 50-a  was  to protect the officers from the use of records  as a means for harassment and reprisals and for the purpose of cross-examination' (73 NY2d, at 31 [emphasis supplied])" (Daily Gazette v. City of Schenectady, 93 NY2d 145, 156- 157 (1999)).

December 22, 1999

Again, insofar as the records pertain to police or correction officers, I believe that they would be exempt from disclosure pursuant to §50-a of the Civil Rights Law.

Other records relate to certain "incidences". Without knowledge of the contents of the records, I cannot offer specific guidance. It is possible, however, that persons other than yourself may be identified and that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" pursuant to §87(2)(b). Further, records concerning the incidents may have been compiled for law enforcement purposes and, therefore, fall within the coverage of §87(2)(e).

Lastly, since you asked for a waiver of fees, I point out that the federal Freedom of Information Act, which applies to federal agencies, includes fee waiver provisions, but that the New York Freedom of Information Law, which is applicable in the context of your request, contains no similar provision. Moreover, it has been held that an agency may charge its established fee, even when a request is made by an indigent inmate [Whitehead v. Morgenthau, 552 NYS 2d 518 (1990)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Hall:

I have received your letter of October 26 and the materials attached to it. You have asked for an advisory opinion concerning a request made under the Freedom of Information Law.

According to the correspondence, in a request made on October 6, you sought a variety of items, some of which are specific, while others are rather broad, and at the end of the request, you suggested that it was all encompassing, for you wanted all records from "soup to nuts."

In this regard, it is emphasized at the outset that §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law requires that an applicant must "reasonably describe" the records sought. Therefore, a request must contain sufficient detail to enable agency staff to locate and identify the records. While some aspects of your request likely meet the standard of reasonably describing the records, others, such as those dealing with "other Departmental files, records, etc.", and the remainder involving "soup to nuts" would not meet that standard. In those instances, the request in my view would be inconsistent with the requirements of the Law.

Insofar as the request is appropriate and reasonably describes the records, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. From my perspective, there may be several grounds for denial that might be pertinent. For instance, disclosure of some of the records or portions thereof might, if disclosed, endanger life or safety [see §87(2)(f)]; others might be withheld on the ground that disclosure would constitute an "unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" [§87(2)(b)]; manuals or procedures reflective of non-routine criminal investigative techniques or procedures might be withheld under §87(2)(e)(iv); and some records would likely constitute inter-agency or intra-materials that may be withheld under §87(2)(g).

Lastly, you asked that records made available should be organized and categorized chronologically and by topic, and that those withheld be listed with citations justifying the denial of access to each. In short, the Freedom of Information Law does not require that agencies carry out those functions.

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the Freedom of Information Law and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Tappan Correctional Facility

Ossining, NY 10562

Dear Mr. Smith:

I have received your letter of November 1 and the materials attached to it. You have asked that I offer an opinion as to whether you are entitled to obtain a variety of records that you requested from the New York City Police Department.

In this regard, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of all of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your request, relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning records prepared by police officers in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate. The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;

- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, it was determined that the agency could not claim that the records can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records. [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267 (1996)].

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential victim, a source or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Mr. Willie Smith

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

It is also noted that in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available.

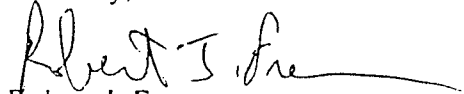

However, in the same decision, it was also found that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

The Court in Moore also specified that an agency "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. John C. Milazzo
Suffolk County Water Authority
4060 Sunrise Highway
Oakdale, NY 11769

Dear Mr. Milazzo:

I have received your letter of November 2 in which you sought an advisory opinion concerning a request made under the Freedom of Information Law.

According to your letter, the Suffolk County Water Authority ("SCWA") "was a party defendant along with other defendants in three lawsuits concerning the same land transaction commence by a resident of a particular Town." In an appearance before a federal judge, the parties represented by counsel, including the SCWA, "entered into a colloquy on the record" and a "Transcript of Conference" was prepared. In brief, the Transcript indicates that the parties agreed to settle the action and "agreed to confidentiality of the terms of the stipulation." One of the attorneys added that "[n]o one shall report, unless required by law, the financial terms or any of the other terms except as may be reflected in duly prepared and recorded property documents." After similar and related statements, the Court asked: "Do the parties understand that a confidentiality agreement means that they can't discuss this other than among themselves with anyone,.... And if the plaintiffs reveal these terms there can be a request to rescind the money and start all over again." The attorneys said that they understood and the Transcript ended there.

The request involves "[a]ny and all agreements, stipulations of settlement, dedication agreements written or oral that has been entered into by all parties." In this regard, I offer the following comments.

The language quoted above that I italicized is, in my view, critical, for the confidentiality agreement specifies that no disclosure would be made "unless required by law", and the judge referred to the inability to "discuss" the stipulation. From my perspective, the parties could validly agree not to speak about the settlement. However, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to records, not to speech. In a decision that is somewhat analogous to the matter that you described, Paul Smith's College of Arts and Sciences v. Cuomo, it was stated that:

"Plaintiff was the subject of a complaint made by a former employee who alleged that he was a victim of age discrimination. Prior to a scheduled hearing and with the assistance of an employee of defendant State Division of Human Rights (hereinafter SDHR), plaintiff entered into a stipulation of settlement with the complaining employee. Plaintiff's stated purpose for settling was to eliminate any negative publicity resulting from a public hearing on the allegations. The order after stipulation signed by defendant Commissioner of Human Rights on August 23, 1989 provided for absolute confidentiality except for enforcement purposes. The order also provided for the withdrawal of the charges and discontinuance of the administrative proceeding. Plaintiff did not admit to a Human Rights violation. On October 27, 1989, SDHR issued a press release detailing the allegations, disclosing that the matter had been settled and set forth certain parts of the settlement terms" [589 NYS2d 106,107, 186 AD2d 888 (1992)].

The Appellate Division determined that the issuance of the press release "was both arbitrary and capricious and an abuse of discretion" (id.), but it also found that the stipulation of settlement was subject to rights of access conferred by the Freedom of Information Law.

I note that it has been held in variety of circumstances that a promise or assertion of confidentiality cannot be upheld, unless a statute specifically confers confidentiality. In Gannett News Service v. Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse Services [415 NYS 2d 780 (1979)], a state agency guaranteed confidentiality to school districts participating in a statistical survey concerning drug abuse. The court determined that the promise of confidentiality could not be sustained, and that the records were available, for none of the grounds for denial appearing in the Freedom of Information Law could justifiably be asserted. In a decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, it was held that a state agency's:

"long-standing promise of confidentiality to the intervenors is irrelevant to whether the requested documents fit within the Legislature's definition of 'record' under FOIL. The definition does not exclude or make any reference to information labeled as 'confidential' by the agency; confidentiality is relevant only when determining whether the record or a portion of it is exempt..." [Washington Post v. Insurance Department, 61 NY 2d 557, 565 (1984)].

In short, as I understand the matter, the parties are precluded from discussing the matter or divulging information regarding the settlement on their own initiative. However, if a record indicating the terms of the stipulation of settlement is requested under the Freedom of Information Law, the SCWA or any other agency that may have possession of the record would, in my view, be required to disclose to the extent "required by law."

With respect to rights of access, as general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." From my perspective, although §3101(c) and (d) of the CPLR authorize confidentiality regarding, respectively, the work product of an attorney and material prepared for litigation, those kinds of records remain confidential in my opinion only so long as they are not disclosed to an adversary or a filed with a court, for example. I do not believe that materials that are served upon or shared with an adversary could be characterized as confidential or exempt from disclosure.

Both of those provisions are intended to shield from an adversary records that would result in a strategic advantage or disadvantage, as the case may be. Reliance on either in the context of a request made under the Freedom of Information Law is in my view dependent upon a finding that the records have not been disclosed, particularly to an adversary. In a decision in which it was determined that records could justifiably be withheld as attorney work product, the "disputed documents" were "clearly work product documents which contain the opinions, reflections and thought process of partners and associates" of a law firm "which have not been communicated or shown to individuals outside of that law firm" [Estate of Johnson, 538 NYS 2d 173 (1989)]. In another decision, the relationship between the attorney-privilege and the ability to withhold the work product of an attorney was discussed, and it was found that:

"The attorney-client privilege requires some showing that the subject information was disclosed in a confidential communication to an attorney for the purpose of obtaining legal advice (Matter of Priest v. Hennessy, 51 N.Y.2d 62, 68-69, 431 N.Y.S.2d 511, 409 N.E.2d 983). The work-product privilege requires an attorney affidavit showing that the information was generated by an attorney for the purpose of litigation (see, Warren v. New York City Tr. Auth., 34 A.D.2d 749, 310 N.Y.S.2d 277). The burden of satisfying each element of the privilege falls on the party asserting it (Priest v. Hennessy, supra, 51 N.Y.2d at 69, 431 N.Y.S. 2d 511, 409 N.E.2d 983), and conclusory assertions will not suffice (Witt v. Triangle Steel Prods. Corp., 103 A.D.2d 742, 477 N.Y.S.2d 210)" [Coastal Oil New York, Inc. v. Peck, [184 AD 2d 241 (1992)].

In a discussion of the parameters of the attorney-client relationship and the conditions precedent to its initiation, it has been held that:

"In general, 'the privilege applies only if (1) the asserted holder of the privilege is or sought to become a client; (2) the person to whom the communication was made (a) is a member of the bar of a court, or his subordinate and (b) in connection with this communication relates to a fact of which the attorney was informed (a) by his client (b) without the presence of strangers (c) for the purpose of securing primarily either (i) an opinion on law or (ii) legal services (iii) assistance in some legal proceeding, and not (d) for the purpose of committing a crime or tort; and (4) the privilege has been (a) claimed and (b) not waived by the client'" [People v. Belge, 59 AD 2d 307, 399 NYS 2d 539, 540 (1977)].

In my view; since the record in question has been communicated among and is known by the parties, any claim of privilege or its equivalent would be effectively waived.

In sum, it appears that the SCWA would be "required by law", i.e., the Freedom of Information Law, to disclose the stipulation of settlement in response to a request for that record.

I hope that I have been of assistance. Should any further questions arise, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Johnston:

I have received your letter of November 4 in which you sought assistance concerning a request for records concerning your case made to the office of the Putnam County District Attorney. Although the request was received by that agency in May, as of the date of your letter to this office, you had received no response.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of all of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your request, relevant is a recent decision by the Court of Appeals concerning "complaint follow up reports" prepared by police officers and police officers' memo books in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate.

The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...we note that one court has suggested that complaint follow-up reports are exempt from disclosure because they constitute nonfinal intra-agency material, irrespective of whether the information contained in the reports is 'factual data' (see, Matter of Scott v. Chief Medical Examiner, 179 AD2d 443, 444, supra [citing Public Officers Law §87(2)(g)] [111]). However, under a plain reading of §87(2)(g), the exemption for intra-agency material does not apply as long as the material falls within any one of the provision's four enumerated exceptions. Thus, intra-agency documents that contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' are subject to FOIL disclosure, whether or not embodied in a final agency policy or determination (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosp. Corp., 62 NY2d 75, 83, supra; Matter of MacRae v. Dolce, 130 AD2d 577)...

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87(2)(g)[i]. Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

"However, the Police Department argues that any witness statements contained in the reports, in particular, are not 'factual' because there is no assurance of the statements' accuracy and reliability. We decline to read such a reliability requirement into the phrase 'factual data', as the dissent would have us do, and conclude that a witness statement constitutes factual data insofar as it embodies a factual account of the witness's observations. Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department,⁸⁹ NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records, as well as others that you requested.

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;

- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

Also relevant is the first ground for denial, §87(2)(a), which pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute". One such statute, §190.25(4) of the Criminal Procedure Law deals with grand jury proceedings and provides in relevant part that:

"Grand jury proceedings are secret, and no grand juror, or other person specified in subdivision three of this section or section 215.70 of the penal law, may, except in the lawful discharge of his duties or upon written order of the court, disclose the nature or substance of any grand jury testimony, evidence, or any decision, result or other matter attending a grand jury proceeding."

As such, grand jury related records would be outside the scope of rights conferred by the Freedom of Information Law. Any disclosure of those records would be based upon a court order or perhaps a vehicle authorizing or requiring disclosure that is separate and distinct from the Freedom of Information Law.

Lastly, in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available. However, in the same decision, it was also found that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

The Court in Moore also specified that an agency "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Dear Ms. Burdman:

I have received your letter of October 27, which reached this office on November 8. You have sought assistance in obtaining copies of medicaid records from the New York City Human Resources Administration (HRA) relating to payments made for a medical procedure in 1973 and 1974.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401), each agency is required to designate one or more persons as records access officer. That person has the duty to coordinate an agency's response to requests, and it is suggested that you direct a request in writing to the records access officer at HRA. Even though that person may not have physical custody of the records, it is his or her duty to ensure that agency staff attempt to locate the records and make them available in a manner consistent with law.

Second, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records. Since the records of your interest would have been prepared at least twenty-five years ago, they may no longer exist. If that is so, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

Assuming that the records of your interest exist and can be found, I believe that they would be available to you. That statute, in brief, is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

With respect to records maintained by a social services agency, §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Laws pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." Several statutes within the Social Services Law prohibit public disclosure of records identifiable to either applicants for or recipients of public assistance (see e.g., Social Services Law, §§136 and 372). However, with respect to access by the subject of case files, state regulations, 18 NYCRR §357.3, provide in relevant part that:

"(c) Disclosure to applicant, recipient, or persons acting in his behalf.

(1) The case record shall be available for examination at any reasonable time by the applicant or recipient or his authorized representative upon reasonable notice to the local district. The only exceptions to access are:

(i) those materials to which access is governed by separate statutes, such as child welfare, foster care, adoption or child abuse or neglect or any records maintained for the purposes of the Child Care Review Services;

(ii) those materials being maintained separate from public assistance files for purposes of criminal prosecution and referral to the district attorney's office; and

(iii) the county attorney or welfare attorney's files.

(2) Information may be released to a person, a public official, or another social agency from whom the applicant or recipient has requested a particular service when it may properly be assumed that the client has requested the inquirer to act in his behalf and when such information is related to the particular service requested."

Based on the foregoing, if you are the subject of a case file, it is likely that you would have rights of access under the regulations cited above.

Lastly, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

Ms. Elizabeth Burdman

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Ms. Elizabeth Benjamin
Times-Union
90 State Street
Albany, NY 12207

Dear Ms. Benjamin:

I have received your recent letter in which you sought an advisory opinion concerning rights of access to the contract between Albany County and the Firebirds, an indoor football team, under which the Firebirds have agreed to play at the Pepsi Arena until 2002. You indicated that the County "will not tell us anything else about the deal – like how much it was for – arguing that disclosure of that information would hurt their competitiveness with other arenas."

From my perspective, the contract must be disclosed in great measure, if not in its entirety. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

As you are aware, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, two of the grounds for denial are pertinent to an analysis of rights of access.

The provision that most often relates to the contracting process, §87(2)(c), permits an agency to deny access to records to the extent that disclosure "would impair present or imminent contract awards or collective bargaining negotiations." The key word in that provision in my opinion is "impair", and the question under that provision involves whether or the extent to which disclosure would "impair" the contracting process by diminishing the ability of the government to reach an optimal agreement on behalf of the taxpayers.

As I understand its application, §87(2)(c) generally encompasses situations in which a government agency or a party to negotiations maintains records that have not been made available to others. For example, if an agency seeking bids or proposals has received a number of bids, but the deadline for their submission has not been reached, premature disclosure for the bids to another possible submitter might provide that person or firm with an unfair advantage vis a vis those who already submitted bids. Further, disclosure of the identities of bidders or the number of bidders might enable another potential bidder to tailor his bid in a manner that provides him with an unfair advantage in the bidding process. In such a situation, harm or "impairment" would likely be the result, and the records could justifiably be denied. However, after the deadline for submission of bids or proposals has been reached and a contract has been awarded in view of the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law, it has been held that "the successful bidder had no reasonable expectation of not having its bid open to the public" [Contracting Plumbers Cooperative Restoration Corp. v. Ameruso, 105 Misc. 2d 951, 430 NYS 2d 196, 198 (1980)]. Similarly, if an agency is involved in collective bargaining negotiations with a public employee union, and the union requests records reflective of the agency's strategy, the items that it considers to be important or otherwise, its estimates and projections, it is likely that disclosure to the union would place the agency at an unfair disadvantage at the bargaining table and, therefore, that disclosure would "impair" negotiating the process.

In this instance, since an agreement has been reached, I do not believe that §87(2)(c) would serve as a basis for denial.

Based on your description of the County's contention, it appears that its refusal to disclose may involve §87(2)(d), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are trade secrets or are submitted to an agency by a commercial enterprise or derived from information obtained from a commercial enterprise and which if disclosed would cause substantial injury to the competitive position of the subject enterprise..."

As I understand the matter, the County's stance does not relate to protecting the Firebirds, which is a commercial enterprise, but rather its own position as owner of the Pepsi Arena and a competitor with other arenas. There are numerous situations in which governmental entities own and/or operate what might be characterized as recreational or entertainment venues or facilities, such as skating rinks, marinas, theaters, campgrounds and the like, all of which may be in competition with private entities. Nevertheless, I know of no judicial decision in which it was held or inferred that records pertaining to the activities relating to those enterprises could be withheld under §87(2)(d) or any other exception.

Even if it could successfully be contended that disclosure of some elements of the contract would, if disclosed, cause substantial injury to the competitive position of Albany County as owner of the arena, the remainder of the contract would be accessible. I note that the Court of Appeals, the State's highest court, has stressed that the Freedom of Information Law should be construed expansively. Most recently, in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY 2d 267 (1996)], the Court reiterated its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law, stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption'

Ms. Elizabeth Benjamin
December 28, 1999

(Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the agency contended that certain records could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g). The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276), and stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, stating that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink vl. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

In the context of your inquiry, it is questionable in my view whether §87(2)(d) could validly be asserted, and even if it could, whether or the extent to which any aspect of the contract would, if disclosed, cause "substantial injury" to the County's competitive position.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. William M. Cullen
Behrens, Loew & Cullen
12 Seacrest Drive
Lloyd Harbor, NY 11743

Dear Mr. Cullen:

I have received your letter of November 4 and the materials attached to it. In your capacity as attorney for the Board of Trustees of the Great Neck Library, you referred to an advisory opinion prepared on October 28 at the request of Ms. Ralene Adler and suggested that Ms. Adler "misunderstood the nature and composition" of what you characterized as "focus group interviews with small groups of individuals representing a wide spectrum of community interests." You also referred to the records prepared by a consultant retained by the Board and asked that I confirm our discussion in which it was advised that such records constitute "intra-agency materials" that would fall within the scope of §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, while I do not fully understand the role of members of the Board of Trustees in relation to serving as a focus group, it is reiterated that a gathering of a majority of the members of the Board, in their capacity as Board members, for the purpose of conducting the business of that body would, in my view, constitute a "meeting" that falls within the framework of the Open Meetings Law. If the gathering does not involve conducting the business of the body, the Open Meetings Law would not apply.

Second, the provision in the Freedom of Information Law to which reference was made earlier permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;

- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In a discussion of the issue of records prepared by consultants for agencies, the Court of Appeals stated that:

"Opinions and recommendations prepared by agency personnel may be exempt from disclosure under FOIL as 'predecisional materials, prepared to assist an agency decision makerin arriving at his decision' (McAulay v. Board of Educ., 61 AD 2d 1048, aff'd 48 NY 2d 659). Such material is exempt 'to protect the deliberative process of government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role would be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers (Matter of Sea Crest Const. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD 2d 546, 549).

"In connection with their deliberative process, agencies may at times require opinions and recommendations from outside consultants. It would make little sense to protect the deliberative process when such reports are prepared by agency employees yet deny this protection when reports are prepared for the same purpose by outside consultants retained by agencies. Accordingly, we hold that records may be considered 'intra-agency material' even though prepared by an outside consultant at the behest of an agency as part of the agency's deliberative process (see, Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD 2d 546, 549, supra; Matter of 124 Ferry St. Realty Corp. v. Hennessy, 82 AD 2d 981, 983)" [Xerox Corporation v. Town of Webster, 65 NY 2d 131, 132-133 (1985)].

Based upon the foregoing, records prepared by a consultant for an agency may be withheld or must be disclosed based upon the same standards as in cases in which records are prepared by the staff of an agency. It is emphasized that the Court in Xerox specified that the contents of intra-agency materials determine the extent to which they may be available or withheld, for it was held that:

"While the reports in principle may be exempt from disclosure, on this record - which contains only the barest description of them - we cannot determine whether the documents in fact fall wholly within the scope of FOIL's exemption for 'intra-agency materials,' as claimed by respondents. To the extent the reports contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law section 87[2][g][i], or other material subject to production, they should be redacted and made available to the appellant" (id. at 133).

Therefore, a record prepared by a consultant for an agency would be accessible or deniable, in whole or in part, depending on its contents.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Robinson:

I have received your letter of November 8 concerning a situation in which the Office of the New York County District Attorney has indicated that it cannot locate your file.

In this regard, when an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89 (3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency " shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

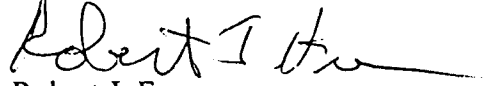

I point out that in Key v. Hynes, [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search." However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when " the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made [Thomas v. Records Access Officer, 613 NYS 2d 929, 205 AD 2d 786 (1994)].

Lastly, although the courts are not subject to the Freedom of Information Law, court records are generally available under other provisions of law (see e.g., Judiciary Law, §255). As such, it may be worthwhile to seek the records of your interest from the court in which the proceeding was conducted, citing an applicable provision of law as the basis for your request.

Mr. Philip Crenshaw

Upstate Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 2001
Malone, NY 12953

Dear Mr. Crenshaw:

I have received your undated letter in which you sought assistance concerning unanswered requests for records that are apparently maintained at your former facility.

In this regard, the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee does not obtain records for individuals. However, in an effort to offer guidance, I offer the following comments.

First, according to the regulations promulgated by the Department of Correctional Services, requests for records kept at a facility should be made to the superintendent or his designee.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

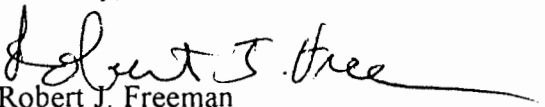

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

For your information, the person designated by the Department to determine appeals is Anthony J. Annucci, Counsel.

Lastly, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since the photographs to which you referred pertain solely to you, I do not believe that any of the grounds for denial would apply. With respect to the other records, their contents and the effects of disclosure would be the factors important in determining the extent to which they would be accessible.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Louis Labriola

Dear Mr. Labriola:

I have received your letter of November 24, as well as the correspondence relating to it. You have sought my views concerning the "inappropriate handling" of a request for records made to the West Islip School District.

By way of background, on October 27, you requested from the District standard operating procedures applicable to school bus drivers, safety instructions, disciplinary guidelines and similar records, as well as the license and driving records pertaining to a particular bus driver. You indicated that "it took the school district 25 days to respond to [your] request" and that District Officials claimed that "it will take a total of 43 days from the time of [your] first request to gather the information."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that.

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges

that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I note that although an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the state's highest court has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

In short, insofar as records are clearly public and can be found easily, there would appear to be no rational basis for delaying disclosure. In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

Second, from my perspective, the records sought are, in most instances, clearly available. As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Records in the nature of standard operating procedures, instructions to staff, an agency's rules and similar materials fall within the coverage of §87(2)(g), which specifies that they must be disclosed. The cited provision states that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

With respect to the driving record, I believe that most of the items sought would be available, irrespective of whether the driver is an employee of the District or a private bus company. I note that Article 19-A of the Vehicle and Traffic Law, entitled "Special Requirements for Bus Drivers", includes provisions that relate to school bus drivers, their disqualification, and the obligation of a school district to obtain their driving records. In terms of access to records, pertinent is §87(2)(b), which permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

It is emphasized in this regard that the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of the official duties of a public officer or employee are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that items relating to public officers or employees are irrelevant to the performance of their official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977, dealing with membership in a union; Minerva v. Village of Valley Stream, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., May 20, 1981, involving the back of a check payable to a municipal attorney that could indicate how that person spends his/her money; Selig v. Sielaff, 200 AD 2d 298 (1994), concerning disclosure of social security numbers].

In my view, due to the provisions applicable to all school bus drivers, the extent to which records must be disclosed would be essentially the same, whether the drivers are employed privately or by the District. Further, in conjunction with the previous commentary, I believe that a driver's driving record, including violations, reference to accidents and similar details relevant to the performance of his or her duties must be disclosed; contrarily, those items that are irrelevant to the performance of one's duties, such as a social security number, home address and date of birth, could be deleted.

In an effort to enhance compliance with and understanding of applicable law, copies of this opinion will be forwarded to District officials.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mr. Howard C. Shmaruk
Assistant County Attorney
County of Rockland
Allison-Parris County Office Building
11 New Hempstead Road
New City, NY 10956

Dear Mr. Shmaruk:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of November 10 in which you sought an advisory opinion concerning the Freedom of Information Law. On behalf your client, the Rockland County Department of Mental Health, which is licensed pursuant to Article 28 of the Public Health Law, you have asked whether a "root cause analysis" involving an "adverse sentinel event" must be disclosed.

By way of background, you wrote that:

"...an adverse sentinel event is an unexpected occurrence, involving death or serious physical or psychological injury, or the risk thereof.

The event is termed 'sentinel' because it issues a warning that requires immediate attention. In a health care facility, like the County's Department of Mental Health, such events do occur and mandate inquiry into how and why the event occurred in order to prevent the same type or similar event from occurring in the future.

When a sentinel event does occur, the Rockland County Department of Mental Health engages in a 'root cause analysis'. This is a process by which the causal factor(s) of the event are identified.

This analysis focuses primarily on systems and processes. Further, the analysis identifies changes that could be made which would improve the level of performance and reduce the risk of a particular serious adverse event occurring in the future.

It should be noted that the root cause analysis of the sentinel event is reduced to a writing including recommended changes in the design or development of new systems and/or processes. This occurs in the ordinary course of business operations."

In response to the foregoing, I offer the following comments.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

If my understanding of the matter is accurate, relevant to an analysis of rights of access is §87(2)(a), which pertains to records that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute." In this regard, §2805-j of the Public Health Law states in part that:

"1. Every hospital shall maintain a coordinated program for the identification and prevention of medical, dental and podiatric malpractice. Such program shall include at least the following:

(a) The establishment of a quality assurance committee with the responsibility to review the services rendered in the hospital in order to improve the quality of medical, dental and podiatric care of patients and to prevent medical, dental and podiatric malpractice. Such committee shall oversee and coordinate the medical, dental and podiatric malpractice prevention program and shall insure that information gathered pursuant to the program is utilized to review procedures. At least one member of the committee shall be a member of the governing board of the hospital who is not otherwise affiliated with the hospital in an employment or contractual capacity."

Other provisions of §2805-j involve the development of procedures concerning competence, the periodic review of credentials, and the collection of information concerning a hospital's experience with "negative health care outcomes and incidents injurious to patients." Section 2805-k involves investigations undertaken by hospitals prior to the granting or renewal of professional privileges. Section 2805-l requires that hospitals report certain kinds of "incidents" to the Health Department, and that investigations be performed and reported to the Department concerning those incidents.

Perhaps most important in terms of your inquiry is §2805-m, which states in part that:

"1. The information required to be collected and maintained pursuant to sections twenty-eight hundred five-j and twenty-eight hundred five-

k of this article, reports required to be submitted pursuant to section twenty-eight hundred five-l of this article and any incident reporting requirements imposed upon diagnostic and treatment centers pursuant to the provisions of this chapter shall be kept confidential and shall not be released except to the department or pursuant to subdivision four of section twenty-eight hundred five-k of this article.

2. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, none of the records, documentation or committee actions or records required pursuant to sections twenty-eight hundred five-j and twenty-eight hundred five-k of this article, the reports required pursuant to section twenty-eight hundred five-l of this article nor any incident reporting requirements imposed upon diagnostic and treatment centers pursuant to the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to disclosure under article six of the public officers law or article thirty-one of the civil practice law and rules, except as hereinafter provided or as provided by any other provision of law."

Article six of the Public Officers Law is the Freedom of Information Law. Therefore, when records involve quality assurance pursuant to §§2805-j, k or l of the Public Health Law, they must be kept confidential, notwithstanding the provisions of the Freedom of Information Law.

If the provisions cited above are inapplicable, in addition to the authority to withhold personally identifying details concerning patients as "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" pursuant to §§87(2)(b) and 89(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, §87(2)(g) would also be pertinent. That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

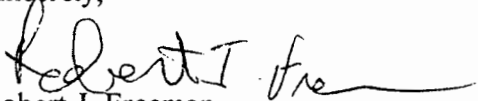

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Mr. Dwayne A. Douglas
99-R-3102
Wyoming Correctional Facility
Attica, NY 14011-0501

Dear Mr. Douglas:

I have received our letter and the materials attached to it concerning requests for records directed to the Town of North Greenbush and Rensselaer County.

In this regard, I have contacted the Town Clerk on your behalf, and she informed me that the records have been retrieved and are available to you upon payment of the requisite fee. She indicated that it is your belief that no fee may be charged when an applicant is indigent. In short, that is not so. While there are provisions in the federal Freedom of Information Act, which applies solely to federal agencies, that involve fee waivers, there is no similar provision in the New York Freedom of Information Law. Further, it has been held judicially that an agency may charge its established fee, even if the applicant is an indigent inmate [see Whitehead v. Morgenthau, 518 NYS2d 552 (1990)].

In sum, I do not believe that the Town is obliged to prepare copies of the records sought until the proper fee is forwarded.

A second issue involves a request that had apparently not been answered. Here I point out that the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government (21 NYCRR Part 1401) require that each agency, such as a county, designate one or more persons as "records access officer." The records access officer has the duty of coordinating an agency's response to requests. While I believe that the persons in receipt of your requests should have responded directly in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law or forwarded the request to the records access officer, in the future, it is recommended that requests be made to an agency's designated records access officer.

When a proper request is made, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

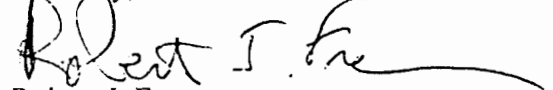

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the matter and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Ms. Lee Lama

Mr. Scott Copp

Dear Ms. Lama and Mr. Copp:

I have received your letters and related materials, all of which pertain to the fees assessed by the Town of Perinton for providing copies of oversized records. Mr. Copp has indicated that the fee is based in part on "employee time and travel distance" needed to utilize the services of the local Kinko Copy Center. Ms. Lama wrote, however, that "Kinko's provides free pickup and delivery and ensures the integrity of the documents in their possession."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, by way of background, §87(1)(b)(iii) of the Freedom of Information Law stated until October 15, 1982, that an agency could charge up to twenty-five cents per photocopy or the actual cost of reproduction unless a different fee was prescribed by "law". Chapter 73 of the Laws of 1982 replaced the word "law" with the term "statute". As described in the Committee's fourth annual report to the Governor and the Legislature of the Freedom of Information Law, which was submitted in December of 1981 and which recommended the amendment that is now law:

"The problem is that the term 'law' may include regulations, local laws, or ordinances, for example. As such, state agencies by means of regulation or municipalities by means of local law may and in some instances have established fees in excess of twenty-five cents per photocopy, thereby resulting in constructive denials of access. To remove this problem, the word 'law' should be replaced by 'statute',

Ms. Lee Lama
Mr. Scott Copp
December 28, 1999

thereby enabling an agency to charge more than twenty-five cents only in situations in which an act of the State Legislature, a statute, so specifies."

Therefore, prior to October 15, 1982, a local law, an ordinance, or a regulation for instance, establishing a search fee or a fee in excess of twenty-five cents per photocopy or higher than the actual cost of reproduction was valid. However, under the amendment, only an act of the State Legislature, a statute, would in my view permit the assessment of a fee higher than twenty-five cents per photocopy up to nine by fourteen inches, a fee that exceeds the actual cost of reproducing records larger than nine by fourteen inches or that cannot be photocopied, (i.e., electronic information), or any other fee, such as a fee for search or overhead costs. In addition, it has been confirmed judicially that fees inconsistent with the Freedom of Information Law may be validly charged only when the authority to do so is conferred by a statute [see Gandin, Schotsky & Rappaport v. Suffolk County, 640 NYS 2d 214, 226AD 2d 339 (1996); Sheehan v. City of Syracuse, 521 NYS 2d 207 (1987)].

Further, the specific language of the Freedom of Information Law and the regulations promulgated by the Committee on Open Government indicate that, absent statutory authority, an agency may charge fees only for the reproduction of records. Section 87(1)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law states:

"Each agency shall promulgate rules and regulations in conformance with this article...and pursuant to such general rules and regulations as may be promulgated by the committee on open government in conformity with the provisions of this article, pertaining to the availability of records and procedures to be followed, including, but not limited to...

(iii) the fees for copies of records which shall not exceed twenty-five cents per photocopy not in excess of nine by fourteen inches, or the actual cost of reproducing any other record, except when a different fee is otherwise prescribed by statute."

The regulations promulgated by the Committee state in relevant part that:

"Except when a different fee is otherwise prescribed by statute:

- (a) There shall be no fee charged for the following:
- (1) inspection of records;
 - (2) search for records; or
 - (3) any certification pursuant to this Part" (21 NYCRR 1401.8)."

Ms. Lee Lama
Mr. Scott Copp

Second, in my opinion, every statute, including the Freedom of Information Law, must be carried out reasonably and in a manner consistent with its intent. Based upon the legislative declaration appearing at the beginning of that statute (§84), it is clear that it is intended to foster maximum access to records and ensure that "the state and its localities" make records available and "extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible."

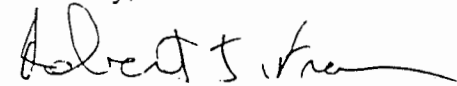

From my perspective, if there is no way for the Town to reproduce an oversized record other than having have staff travel to a location where copies could be made, it would be reasonable to charge for the time expended by its employees; that would be part of the actual cost. However, if the entity preparing the copies "provides pickup and delivery" at no charge and ensures the security and integrity of the records, it would be unreasonable, in my opinion, to use the services of a Town employee in traveling back and forth to the location of the copying service and to wait for copies to made. So doing would result in an unnecessary expenditure of time, and it would also serve as an impediment to the public's right to obtain copies of records under the Freedom of Information Law. Many people, in my view, would likely not avail themselves of the ability to obtain copies of records if the cost of so doing is prohibitive.

In sum, if Kinko's provides free pickup and delivery and guarantees the security of the records, I believe that the Town may charge an applicant for the record only the amount that Kinko's charges the Town.

Lastly, bills, receipts, vouchers and similar records indicating charges to the Town for services rendered by Kinko's or other providers of goods or services would in my view clearly be accessible under the Freedom of Information Law. In short, none of the grounds for denial of access appearing in §87(2) of the law would be applicable.

I hope that I have been of assistance. If you would like to consider the matter further, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Dear Mr. Wright:

I have received your letter of November 1 in which you complained concerning the treatment of your requests made to the New York City Police Department under the Freedom of Information Law. Although you did not include copies of the requests, you referred to "interrogatories" and posing questions.

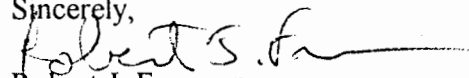

In this regard, one of the difficulties may be that an agency's obligation under the Freedom of Information Law involves providing access, to the extent required by law, to existing records. An agency is not required by that statute to answer questions or respond to interrogatories; again, its obligation is respond to requests for records and to grant or deny access to those records in whole or in part. Similarly, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that an agency is not required to create a record in response to a request. Therefore, neither the Department nor any other agency is required to prepare a new record in response to a request for information or a question.

In short, in the future, rather than seeking information or attempting to elicit responses to questions, it is suggested that you seek existing records in a manner consistent with the Freedom of Information Law.

County Attorney
County of Westchester
Room 600, Michaelian Office Bldg.

Dear Mr. Scheinkman:

I appreciate having received your determination of an appeal rendered under the Freedom of Information Law following a request by James F. LaRue of JFL Environmental, Inc. Mr. LaRue sought a "list of industries that have paid surcharge fees for exceeding federal and state limits for wastewater discharged into Westchester County's sewer system." You sustained the initial denial of the request on the basis of §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which authorizes agencies to withhold records insofar as disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy", and §89(2)(b)(iii), which states that an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy includes the "sale or release of lists of names and addresses if such lists would be used for commercial or fund-raising purposes."

I respectfully disagree with your determination.

From my perspective, and in view of judicial interpretations, §87(2)(b) is intended to pertain to natural persons, not entities or persons acting in business capacities. In a decision rendered by the Court of Appeals that focuses upon the privacy provisions, the court referred to the authority to withhold "certain personal information about private citizens" [see Matter of Federation of New York State Rifle and Pistol Clubs, Inc. v. The New York City Police Department, 73 NY 2d 92 (1989)]. In another decision, the opinion of this office was cited and confirmed, and the court held that "the names and business addresses of individuals or entities engaged in animal farming for profit do not constitute information of a private nature, and this conclusion is not changed by the fact that a person's business address may also be the address of his or her residence" [American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals v. New York State Department of Agriculture and Markets, Supreme Court, Albany County, May 10, 1989).

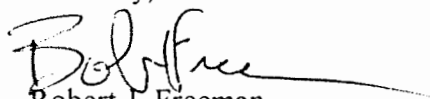

Mr. Alan D. Scheinkman

Similarly, in a case concerning records pertaining to the performance of individual cardiac surgeons, the court granted access and cited an opinion prepared by this office in which it was advised that the information should be disclosed since it concerned professional activity licensed by the state (Newsday Inc. v. New York State Department of Health, Supreme Court, Albany County, October 15, 1991).

In short, I do not believe that the provisions in the Freedom of Information Law pertaining to the protection of personal privacy may be asserted to withhold records pertaining to entities other than natural persons. On the contrary, since the records sought relate to commercial entities, I do not believe that any of the grounds for denial would be applicable.

If you would like to discuss the matter, please feel free to contact me. I hope that I have been of assistance.

Ms. Susan R. Saslaw

Dear Ms. Saslaw:

As you are aware, I have received a variety of materials involving your efforts in obtaining records pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law relating to your applications to the Assigned Counsel Plan of the Appellate Division, First Department. Although one application was located and made available, you were informed that:

"All other papers in the file constitute intra-agency and inter-agency material not subject to disclosure under section 87 of the Public Officers Law. Moreover, such disclosure would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy under Section 87 and 89 of the Public Officers Law. Accordingly, other than your application, your F.O.I.L. request must be denied."

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

The response to your request alluded initially to §87(2)(g). Although that provision potentially serves as a basis for denial of access, due to its structure, it often requires substantial disclosure. Specifically, § 87 (2)(g) enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;

- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

One of the contentions offered by the New York City Police Department in 1996 decision rendered by the Court of Appeals was that certain reports could be withheld because they are not final and because they relate to incidents for which no final determination had been made. The Court of Appeals rejected that finding and stated that:

"...we note that one court has suggested that complaint follow-up reports are exempt from disclosure because they constitute nonfinal intra-agency material, irrespective of whether the information contained in the reports is 'factual data' (see, Matter of Scott v. Chief Medical Examiner, 179 AD2d 443, 444, supra citing Public Officers Law §87(2)(g)). However, under a plain reading of §87(2)(g), the exemption for intra-agency material does not apply as long as the material falls within any one of the provision's four enumerated exceptions. Thus, intra-agency documents that contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' are subject to FOIL disclosure, whether or not embodied in a final agency policy or determination (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosp. Corp., 62 NY2d 75, 83, supra; Matter of MacRae v. Dolce, 130 AD2d 577)... [Gould et al. v. New York City Police Department, 87 NY2d 267, 276 (1996)].

The Court also dealt with the issue of what constitutes "factual data" that must be disclosed under §87(2)(g)(i). In its consideration of the matter, the Court found that:

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549)). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87[2][g][i]. Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182)" (id., 276-277)

In view of the direction offered by the Court of Appeals, insofar as the records sought are inter-agency or intra-agency materials consisting of statistical or factual information, I believe that they must be disclosed, unless a different exception may be asserted.

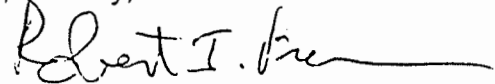

That other exception, which was cited in the response to your request, involves the ability to withhold records pursuant to §87(2)(b) to the extent that disclosure would result in "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." In addition, §89(2) provides that agencies may delete identifying details to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and includes a series of examples of such invasions. Of potential significance is the first such example, which involves:

"disclosure of employment, medical or credit histories or personal references of applicants for employment" [§89 (2)(b)(i)].

Based on the foregoing, I believe that a reference regarding employment may be withheld, unless the deletion of identifying details would effectively prevent the recipient of such record from determining the author of the reference. If, however, deletion of identifying details would not serve to protect the identity of the author of a reference, that document could, in my opinion, be withheld in its entirety.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Ms. Cynthia Geones
District Clerk
Rockville Centre Union
Free School District
128 Shepherd Street
Rockville Centre, NY 11570

Dear Ms. Geones:

I have received your letter of November 3 in which you raised the following question: "if a school district has in its possession a copy of a referral to Child Protective Services on a student, can that copy be released to a parent (or child if 18 years old under FOIL)?" You indicated that the Nassau County Department of Child Protective Services has informed you that the District cannot disclose.

In this regard, in an effort to obtain expert advice, I contacted an attorney with the New York State Office of Children and Family Services who specializes in issues involving child protective services. Based on our discussion, with certain exceptions, I believe that the District may disclose the record in question to a parent. Such disclosure would not be made pursuant to the Freedom of Information Law, but rather pursuant to either the federal Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act ("FERPA", 20 USC §1232g) or §422 of the Social Services Law.

In brief, as you may be aware, FERPA applies to all educational agencies or institutions that participate in funding, loan or grant programs administered by the United States Department of Education. As such, FERPA includes within its scope virtually all public educational institutions and many private educational institutions. The focal point of the Act is the protection of privacy of students. It provides, in general, that any "education record," a term that is broadly defined, that is personally identifiable to a particular student or students is confidential, unless the parents of students under the age of eighteen waive their right to confidentiality, or unless a student eighteen years or over similarly waives his or her right to confidentiality. The federal regulations promulgated under FERPA define the phrase "personally identifiable information" to include:

Ms. Cynthia Geones

December 28, 1999

Page - 2 -

- "(a) The student's name;
- (b) The name of the student's parents or other family member;
- (c) The address of the student or student's family;
- (d) A personal identifier, such as the student's social security number or student number;
- (e) A list of personal characteristics that would make the student's identity easily traceable; or
- (f) Other information that would make the student's identity easily traceable" (34 CFR Section 99.3).

Based upon the foregoing, references to students' names or other aspects of records that would make a student's identity easily traceable must in my view be withheld from the public in order to comply with federal law. Concurrently, if a parent of student requests records pertaining to his or her child, the parent ordinarily will have rights of access to those portions of records that are personally identifiable to their children.

I point out that even though a parent might not have custody of a child, that factor alone is not determinative of right conferred by FERPA. The term "parent" is defined in the regulations adopted pursuant to FERPA by the United States Department of Education to mean a "parent of a student and includes a natural parent, a guardian, or an individual acting as a parent in the absence of a parent or a guardian" (34 CFR 99.3). Further, 34 CFR 99.4 states that:

"An educational agency or institution shall give full rights under the Act to either parent, unless the agency or institution has been provided with evidence that there is a court order, State statute, or legally binding document relating to such matters as divorce, separation, or custody that specifically revokes those rights."

Based on the foregoing, in the case of divorce or separation, a school district must, in my view, provide access to both natural parents, custodial and non-custodial, unless there is a legally binding document that specifically removes a parent's rights under FERPA, or a statutory prohibition against disclosure. I believe that a legally binding document would include a court order or other legal paper that prohibits access to educational records, or removes the parent's rights to have knowledge about his or her child's education.

Although the Freedom of Information Law generally deals with rights of access to agency records, relevant in this instance is §87 (2)(a) of that statute, which provides that an agency may deny access to records or portions thereof that "are specifically exempted from disclosure by state or federal statute...". Section 422 of the Social Services Law is a statute which pertains specifically to the statewide central register utilized by an agency having responsibility regarding such matters. Subdivision (4)(A) of section 422 states that reports as well as information concerning those reports are confidential, and may be disclosed only under specified circumstances listed in that statute. One of those circumstances involves disclosures to "any person who is the subject of the report or other persons named in the report" [§422 (A)(d)]. In addition, subdivision (7) of section 422 states:

Ms. Cynthia Geones

“At any time, a subject of a report and other persons names in the report may received, upon request, a copy of all information contained in the central register; provided, however, that the commissioner is authorized to prohibit the release of date that would identify the person who made the report or who cooperated in a subsequent investigation or the agency, institutes, organizations, program or other entity where such person is employed or with which he is associated, which he reasonably finds will be detrimental to the safety or interests of such person.”

Based on the foregoing, although a report may generally be available to a parent, those portions that would, if disclosed, identify the source of the report may be withheld to protect that person's privacy and safety.

Lastly, I note that a new subdivision (5) of §422 of the Social Services Law generally prohibits the disclosure of reports that have been determined to be unfounded. As such, when a request for a report is received by the District, it is suggested that contact be made with the County Department of Child Protective Services to determine the status of the report.

I hope that I have been of assistance. Should any further questions arise, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Mr. Milton Pacheco
79-B-00064
Clinton Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 2001
Dannemora, NY 12929-2001

Dear Mr. Pacheco:

I have received your letter of October 29 in which you sought my views concerning a request for records pertaining to your case that was largely denied by the Office of the New York County District Attorney. Having reviewed the correspondence, I offer the following comments.

First, some of the records that you requested apparently do not exist or are not maintained by the Office of the District Attorney. Since the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing agency records, that statute would not apply to records that do not exist or are not maintained by that agency.

Second, of potential relevance to the matter is the decision rendered in Moore v. Santucci [151 AD 2d 677 (1989)], in which it was held that if records have been disclosed during a public proceeding, they are generally available under the Freedom of Information Law. In that decision, it was also found, however, that an agency need not make available records that had been previously disclosed to the applicant or that person's attorney, unless there is an allegation "in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence." In my view, if you can "in evidentiary form" demonstrate that neither you nor your attorney maintain records that had previously been disclosed, the agency would be required to respond to a request for the same records. I also point out, however, that the decision in Moore specified that the respondent office of a district attorney was "not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

Third, assuming that the records sought involving interviews of witnesses, as well as others, have not been previously disclosed, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law would determine rights of access. As a general matter, that statute is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. In my view, several of the grounds for denial could be pertinent.

Section 87(2)(b) permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". From my perspective, the propriety of a denial of access would, under the circumstances, be dependent upon the nature of statements by witnesses or the contents of other records have already been disclosed. If disclosure of the records in question would not serve to infringe upon witnesses' privacy in view of prior disclosures, §87(2)(b) might not justifiably serve as a basis for denial. However, if the statements in question include substantially different information, that provision may be applicable. That provision would in my view enable an agency to withhold medical, mental health and other personnel records.

Also potentially relevant is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in subparagraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Section 87(2)(f) permits an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would "endanger the life or safety of any person." Without knowledge of the facts and circumstances of your case, I could not conjecture as to the relevance of that provision.

Lastly, §87(2)(g) authorizes an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;

- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

With respect to criminal history records, the general repository of those records is the Division of Criminal Justice Services. While the subject of a criminal history record may obtain such record from the Division, it has been held that criminal history records maintained by that agency are exempted from public disclosure pursuant to §87(2)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law [Capital Newspapers v. Poklemba, Supreme Court, Albany County, April 6, 1989]. Nevertheless, if, for example, criminal conviction records were used in conjunction with a criminal proceeding by a district attorney, it has been held that the district attorney must disclose those records [see Thompson v. Weinstein, 150 AD 2d 782 (1989)].

It is noted that in a decision rendered by the Appellate Division, Second Department, the Court reconfirmed its position that criminal history records are, in general, exempt from disclosure [Woods v. Kings County District Attorney's Office, 234 AD 2d 554 (1996)].

Lastly, §390.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law in my opinion represents the exclusive procedure concerning access to presentence reports.

Section 390.50 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Law states that:

"Any pre-sentence report or memorandum submitted to the court pursuant to this article and any medical, psychiatric or social agency report or other information gathered for the court by a probation department, or submitted directly to the court, in connection with the question of sentence is confidential and may not be made available to any person or public or private agency except where specifically required or permitted by statute or upon specific authorization of the court. For purposes of this section, any report, memorandum or other information forwarded to a probation department within this state is governed by the same rules of confidentiality. Any person, public or private agency receiving such material must retain it under the same conditions of confidentiality as apply to the probation department that made it available."

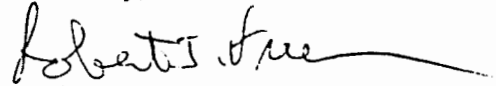

Mr. Milton Pacheco

In addition, subdivision (2) of §390.50 states in part that: "The pre-sentence report shall be made available by the court for examination and copying in connection with any appeal in the case..."

In view of the foregoing, I believe that a pre-sentence report may be made available only upon the order of a court, and only under the circumstances described in §390.50 of the Criminal Procedure Law. It is suggested that you review that statute.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

In this regard, §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law pertains to the right to appeal and states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record sought."

Dear Mr. Ahearn:

I have received your letter of November 12 concerning your right to obtain a report relating to an investigation of fraud on the part of Sullivan County employees. You indicated that investigation was conducted by law enforcement officials and the District Attorney, and that your request was denied on several grounds.

In this regard, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. It is emphasized that the introductory language of §87(2) refers to the authority to withhold "records or portions thereof" that fall within the scope of the exceptions that follow. In my view, the phrase quoted in the preceding sentence evidences a recognition on the part of the Legislature that a single record or report, for example, might include portions that are available under the statute, as well as portions that might justifiably be withheld. That being so, I believe that it also imposes an obligation on an agency to review records sought, in their entirety, to determine which portions, if any, might properly be withheld or deleted prior to disclosing the remainder. The Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, expressed its general view of the intent of the Freedom of Information Law in Gould v. New York City Police Department [87 NY 2d 267 (1996)], stating that:

"To ensure maximum access to government records, the 'exemptions are to be narrowly construed, with the burden resting on the agency to demonstrate that the requested material indeed qualifies for exemption' (Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 79 N.Y.2d 106, 109, 580 N.Y.S.2d 715, 588 N.E.2d 750 see, Public Officers Law § 89[4][b]). As this Court has stated, '[o]nly where the material requested falls squarely within the ambit of one of these statutory exemptions may disclosure be withheld' (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, 47 N.Y.2d, 567, 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463)" (id., 275).

Just as significant, the Court in Gould repeatedly specified that a categorical denial of access to records is inconsistent with the requirements of the Freedom of Information Law. In that case, the agency contended that complaint follow up reports, also known as "DD5's", could be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they fall within the exception regarding intra-agency materials, §87(2)(g). The Court, however, wrote that: "Petitioners contend that because the complaint follow-up reports contain factual data, the exemption does not justify complete nondisclosure of the reports. We agree" (id., 276). The Court then stated as a general principle that "blanket exemptions for particular types of documents are inimical to FOIL's policy of open government" (id., 275). The Court also offered guidance to agencies and lower courts in determining rights of access and referred to several decisions it had previously rendered, directing that:

"...to invoke one of the exemptions of section 87(2), the agency must articulate 'particularized and specific justification' for not disclosing requested documents (Matter of Fink v. Lefkowitz, supra, 47 N.Y.2d, at 571, 419 N.Y.S.2d 467, 393 N.E.2d 463). If the court is unable to determine whether withheld documents fall entirely within the scope of the asserted exemption, it should conduct an in camera inspection of representative documents and order disclosure of all nonexempt, appropriately redacted material (see, Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 N.Y.2d 131, 133, 490 N.Y.S. 2d, 488, 480 N.E.2d 74; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d, at 83, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437)" (id.).

I am not suggesting that the records sought must be disclosed in full. Rather, based on the direction given by the Court of Appeals in several decisions, the records must be reviewed by the agency for the purpose of identifying those portions of the records that might fall within the scope of one or more of the grounds for denial of access. As the Court stated later in the decision: "Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" (id., 277; emphasis added).

The provision at issue in Gould, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;

- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87(2)(g)(i). Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

"However, the Police Department argues that any witness statements contained in the reports, in particular, are not 'factual' because there is no assurance of the statements' accuracy and reliability. We decline to read such a reliability requirement into the phrase 'factual data', as the dissent would have us do, and conclude that a witness statement constitutes factual data insofar as it embodies a factual account of the witness's observations. Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply.

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

That provision would also be pertinent in relation to disciplinary matters involving public employees. While the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public officers and employees. It is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public officers and employees are required to be more accountable than others. With regard to records pertaining to public officers and employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a their official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, supra; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)]. Conversely, to the extent that records are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties, it has been found that disclosure would indeed constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Matter of Wool, Sup. Ct., Nassau Cty., NYLJ, Nov. 22, 1977]. In terms of the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, it is emphasized that in situations in which allegations or charges have resulted in the issuance of a written reprimand, disciplinary action, or findings that public employees have engaged in misconduct, records reflective of those kinds of determinations have been found to be available, including the names of those who are the subjects of disciplinary action [see Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); also Farrell, Geneva Printing, Scaccia and Sinicropi, supra].

Other decisions have dealt with settlements reached following the initiation of disciplinary proceedings. In Geneva Printing, supra, a public employee charged with misconduct and in the process of an arbitration hearing engaged in a settlement agreement with a municipality. One aspect of the settlement was an agreement to the effect that its terms would remain confidential. Notwithstanding the agreement of confidentiality, which apparently was based on an assertion that "the public interest is benefited by maintaining harmonious relationships between government and its employees", the court found that no ground for denial could justifiably be cited to withhold the agreement. On the contrary, it was determined that:

"the citizen's right to know that public servants are held accountable when they abuse the public trust outweighs any advantage that would accrue to municipalities were they able to negotiate disciplinary matters with its employee with the power to suppress the terms of any settlement".

It was also found that the record indicating the terms of the settlement constituted a final agency determination available under the Law. The decision states that:

"It is the terms of the settlement, not just a notation that a settlement resulted, which comprise the final determination of the matter. The public is entitled to know what penalty, if any, the employee suffered...The instant records are the decision or final determination of the village, albeit arrived at by settlement..."

In another more recent decision involving a settlement agreement between a school district and a teacher, it was held in Anonymous v. Board of Education [616 NYS 2d 867 (1994)] that:

"...it is disingenuous for petitioner to argue that public disclosure is permissible...only where an employee is found guilty of a specific charge. The settlement agreement at issue in the instant case contains the petitioner's express admission of guilt to a number of charges and specifications. This court does not perceive the distinction between a finding of guilt after a hearing and an admission of guilt insofar as protection from disclosure is concerned" (id., 870).

As suggested by the Court in Anonymous, there is no distinction in substance between a finding of guilt after a hearing and an admission of guilt as a means of avoiding such a proceeding. The same decision also referred to contentions involving privacy as follows:

"Petitioner contends that disclosure of the terms of the settlement at issue in this case would constitute an unwarranted invasion of his privacy prohibited by Public Officers Law § 87(2)(b). Public Officers Law § 89(2)(b) defines an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy as, in pertinent part, '(i) disclosure of employment, medical or credit histories or personal references of applicants for employment.' Petitioner argues that the agreement itself provides that it shall become part of his personnel file and that material in his personnel file is exempt from disclosure..." (id.).

In response to those contentions, the decision stated that:

"This court rejects that conclusion as establishing an exemption from disclosure not created by statute (Public Officers Law § 87[2][a]), and not within the contemplation of the 'employment, medical or credit history' language found under the definition of 'unwarranted invasion of personal privacy' at Public Officers Law § 89(2)(b)(i). In fact, the information sought in the instant case, i.e., the terms of settlement of charges of misconduct lodged against a teacher by the Board of Education, is not information in which petitioner has any reasonable expectation of privacy where the agreement contains the teacher's admission to much of the misconduct charged. The agreement does not contain details of the petitioner's personal history-but it does contain the details of admitted misconduct toward students, as well as the agreed penalty. The information is clearly of significant interest to the public, insofar as it is a final determination and disposition of matters within the work of the Board of Education and reveals the process of and basis for government decision-making. This is not a case where petitioner is to be protected from possible harm to his professional reputation from unfounded accusations (Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Melino, 77 N.Y.2d 1, 563 N.Y.S.2d 380, 564 N.E.2d 1046), for this court regards the petitioner's admission to the conduct described in the agreement as the equivalent of founded accusations. As such, the agreement is tantamount to a final agency determination not falling within the privacy exemption of FOIL "since it was not a disclosure of employment history." (id., 871).

Most recently, in LaRocca v. Board of Education of Jericho Union Free School District [632 NYS 2d 576 (1995)], the Appellate Division held that a settlement agreement was available insofar as it included admissions of misconduct. In that case, charges were initiated under §3020-a of the Education Law, but were later "disposed of by negotiation and settled by an Agreement" (id., 577) and withdrawn. The court rejected claims that the record could be characterized as an employment history that could be withheld as an unwarranted invasion of privacy, and found that a confidentiality agreement was invalid. Specifically, it was stated that:

"Having examined the settlement agreement, we find that the entire document does not constitute an 'employment history' as defined by FOIL (see, Matter of Hanig v. State of New York Dept. of Motor Vehicles, supra) and it is therefore presumptively available for public inspection (see, Public Officers Law § 87[2]; Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health and Hosps. Corp., supra, 62 N.Y.2d 75, 476 N.Y.S.2d 69, 464 N.E.2d 437). Moreover, as a matter of public policy, the Board of Education cannot bargain away the public's right of access to public records (see, Board of Educ., Great Neck Union Free School Dist. v. Areman, 41 N.Y.2d 527, 394 N.Y.S.2d 143, 362 N.E.2d 943)" (id., 578, 579).

In contrast, when allegations or charges of misconduct have not yet been determined or did not result in disciplinary action or a finding of misconduct, the records relating to such allegations may, in my view, be withheld, for disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Herald Company v. School District of City of Syracuse, 430 NYS 2d 460 (1980)]. Similarly, to the extent that charges are dismissed or allegations are found to be without merit, I believe that they may be withheld.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

Mr. Kevin B. Ahearn

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Kevin Smyth

Beacon, NY 12508-8245

Dear Mr. Smyth:

I have received your letter of November 12, which, in brief, pertains to your requests for records relating to the seizure of your property by the Department of Correctional Services. You contend that the Department engaged in the seizure without a warrant and turned the property over to the FBI.

Without any knowledge of the nature or content of either the property or any records falling within the scope of your request, I cannot offer specific guidance. However, in the following paragraphs, I will attempt to provide commentary of a general nature.

First, as you may be aware, the Freedom of Information Law pertains to existing records, and §89(3) of that statute provides in part that an agency need not create a record in response to a request. Therefore, insofar as the information sought does not exist in the form of a record or records, the Freedom of Information Law would not apply.

I note that when an agency indicates that it does not maintain or cannot locate a record, an applicant for the record may seek a certification to that effect. Section 89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law provides in part that, in such a situation, on request, an agency "shall certify that it does not have possession of such record or that such record cannot be found after diligent search." If you consider it worthwhile to do so, you could seek such a certification.

I point out that in Key v. Hynes [613 NYS 2d 926, 205 AD 2d 779 (1994)], it was found that a court could not validly accept conclusory allegations as a substitute for proof that an agency could not locate a record after having made a "diligent search". However, in another decision, such an allegation was found to be sufficient when "the employee who conducted the actual search for the documents in question submitted an affidavit which provided an adequate basis upon which to conclude that a 'diligent search' for the documents had been made" [Thomas v. Records Access Officer, 613 NYS 2d 929, 205 AD 2d 786 (1994)].

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. It appears that several grounds for denial may be pertinent to an analysis of rights of access to existing records falling within the coverage of your request.

Internal governmental communications between or among officials of the Department of Correctional Services or communications between those persons and officials of entities of state and local government in New York would fall within §87(2)(g). That provision permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

The language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

Of potential significance is a decision rendered by the Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, in which the Court focused on what constitutes "factual data", stating that:

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132, 490 N.Y.S. 2d 488, 480 N.E.2d 74 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549, 442 N.Y.S.2d 130]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87[2][g][i]). Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, 463 N.Y.S.2d 122, mod on other grounds, 61 NY2d 958, 475 N.Y.S.2d 272, 463 N.E. 2d 613; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelton, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182, 417 N.Y.S.2d 142) [Gould v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267, 276, 277 (1996)].

In short, statistical or factual information contained within inter-agency or intra-agency materials would be available, unless a different ground for denial could properly be asserted.

I do not believe that §87(2)(g) may be cited to withhold communications between the Department and a federal agency. Section 86(3) of the Freedom of Information Law defines "agency" to include:

"any state or municipal department, board, bureau, division, commission, committee, public authority, public corporation, council, office or other governmental entity performing a governmental or proprietary function for the state or any one or more municipalities thereof, except the judiciary or the state legislature."

The language quoted above indicates that an "agency" is an entity of state or local government in New York. Since the definition of "agency" does not include a federal agency, §87(2)(g) could not be cited as a means of withholding communications with a federal entity.

Also relevant may be §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation or;
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures;"

The ability to withhold records under the provision quoted above is limited to a finding that the harmful effects described in subparagraphs (i) through (iv) would arise by means of disclosure.

Mr. Kevin Smyth
December 29, 1999

In a related vein, §87(2)(f) authorizes an agency to withhold records to the extent that disclosure would "endanger the life or safety of any person." The extent to which that provision may be asserted would be dependent on the effects of disclosure.

Lastly, since you referred to delays, I point out that the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests and appeals. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

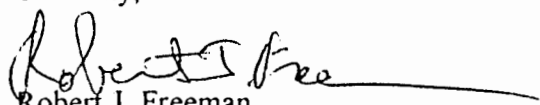

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Darryl Dickens

Coxsackie Correctional Facility
P.O. Box 999
Coxsackie, NY 12051-0999

Dear Mr. Dickens:

I have received your letter of November 9 in which you suggested that I may have misinterpreted your earlier correspondence in which it was advised that records relating to grand jury proceedings are subject to §190.25(4) of the Criminal Procedure Law and, therefore, are outside the coverage of the Freedom of Information Law.

While I believe that to be so, you referred to 190.50(5)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Law, which also pertains grand jury proceedings, but states in part that a district attorney is not required to inform a person charged or about to be charged that:

“a grand jury proceeding against him is pending, in progress or about to occur unless such person is a defendant who has been arraigned in a local criminal court upon a currently undisposed of felony complaint charging an offense which is a subject of the prospective or pending grand jury proceeding. In such case, the district attorney must notify the defendant or his attorney of the prospective or pending grand jury proceeding and accord the defendant a reasonable time to exercise his right to appear as a witness therein...”

If the provision quoted above is applicable, and a written notification was prepared to be made available to you or your attorney, I believe that a copy would be available under the Freedom of Information Law. In short, none of the grounds for denial in §87(2) of that statute would appear to be applicable in such a circumstance.

Mr. Darryl Dickens

Notwithstanding the foregoing, I point out that it was held in Moore v. Santucci [151 AD2d 677 (1989)] that if a record was made available to you or your attorney, there must be a demonstration that neither you nor your attorney possesses the record in order to successfully obtain a second copy. Specifically, the decision states that:

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

Based on the foregoing, it is suggested that you contact your attorney to determine whether he or she continues to possess the record. If the attorney no longer maintains the record, you and the attorney should prepare affidavits so stating that can be submitted to the Office of the District Attorney.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

TO: Sandy Avampato <tlpzsand @nysnet.net>

FROM: Robert J. Freeman, Executive Director RJF

Dear Ms. Avampato:

As you are aware, I have received your letter of November 16. In your capacity as shop steward for your union, you indicated that an employee informed you that a department head routinely photocopies for his files the paychecks of the employees in his department, as well as payroll stubs that include "savings and checking account transfers, loan payments, garnishes, etc."

You have sought guidance on the matter "before approaching the department head and asking him to cease what is apparently a long practice." From my perspective, unless the department head has a need to acquire them in the performance of his official duties, he has no right to review or obtain copies of various aspects of the records at issue. In this regard, I offer the following comments.

As a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

Pertinent to the matter is §87(2)(b), which states that agencies may withhold records to the extent that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." While the standard concerning privacy is flexible and may be subject to conflicting interpretations, the courts have provided substantial direction regarding the privacy of public officers employees. It is clear that public officers and employees enjoy a lesser degree of privacy than others, for it has been found in various contexts that public officers and employees are required to be more accountable than others. Further, with regard to records pertaining to public officers and employees, the courts have found that, as a general rule, records that are relevant to the performance of a their official duties are available, for disclosure in such instances would result in a permissible rather than an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy [see e.g., Farrell v. Village Board of Trustees, 372 NYS 2d 905 (1975); Gannett Co. v. County of Monroe, 59 AD 2d 309 (1977), aff'd 45 NY 2d 954 (1978); Sinicropi v. County of Nassau, 76 AD 2d 838 (1980); Geneva Printing Co. and Donald C. Hadley v. Village of Lyons, Sup. Ct., Wayne Cty., March 25, 1981; Montes v. State, 406 NYS 2d 664 (Court of Claims, 1978); Powhida v. City of Albany, 147 AD 2d 236 (1989); Scaccia v. NYS Division of State Police, 530 NYS 2d 309, 138 AD 2d 50 (1988); Steinmetz v. Board of Education, East Moriches, Sup. Ct., Suffolk Cty., NYLJ, Oct. 30, 1980; Capital Newspapers v. Burns, 67 NY 2d 562 (1986)].

Although tangential to your inquiry, I point out that §87(3)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law states in relevant part that:

"Each agency shall maintain...

(b) a record setting forth the name, public office address, title and salary of every officer or employee of the agency... "

As such, a payroll record that identifies all officers or employees by name, public office address, title and salary must be prepared to comply with the Freedom of Information Law. Moreover, those items were determined to be available even before the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law, for it was found that they:

"...represent important fiscal as well as operational information. The identity of the employees and their salaries are vital statistics kept in the proper recordation of departmental functioning and are the primary sources of protection against employment favoritism. They are subject therefore to inspection" Winston v. Mangan, 338 NYS 2d 654, 664 (1972)].

Because it is clearly relevant to the duties of all public employees, a record identifying them by name, public office address, title and salary must be maintained and made available to any person.

Conversely, however, items that are irrelevant to the performance of one's official duties ordinarily would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy if disclosed. I note that §89(7) of the Freedom of Information Law specifies that home addresses of public employees need not be disclosed, and that it has been held that disclosure of social security numbers would constitute an unwarranted invasion of privacy [see Seelig v. Sielaff, 201 AD2d 298 (1994)]. In two decisions, Matter of Wool (Supreme Court, Nassau County, NYLJ, November 22, 1977) and Minerva v. Village of Valley Stream (Supreme Court, Nassau County, May 20, 1981), the issue involved disclosure of information concerning the manner in which public officers and employees choose to spend their money. In Wool, the issue involved a request for a record indicating salaries of certain public employees, as well as notations of deductions made for payment of union dues. The court held that salary information is clearly available, but that the information involving the payment of union dues could be withheld, stating that "[m]embership in the CSEA has no relevance to an employee's on the job performance or to the functioning of his or her employer." In Minerva, the request involved both sides of checks paid by a municipality to its attorney. While the court held that the front side of the checks must be disclosed, it found that the backs of checks indicating "how he disposes of his lawful salary or fees" could be withheld as an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

In sum, while the names, titles and salaries of public employees are clearly available to the public, the items to which you referred that are unrelated to the performance of public employees' duties may, in my opinion and based on the judicial interpretation of the Freedom of Information Law, be withheld on the ground that disclosure would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Mr. Michael Kitnurse

Comstock, NY 12821

Dear Mr. Kitnurse:

I have received your letter of November 9, as well as the correspondence attached to it. Having reviewed the materials, I offer the following comments.

It is noted at the outset that the Committee on Open Government is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law. The Committee is not empowered to compel an agency to grant or deny access to records, enforce that statute or obtain records on behalf of individuals. However, in an effort offer guidance, I offer the following comments.

First, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

Mr. Michael Kitnurse

Page - 2 -

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

For your information, the person designated by the New York City Police Department to determine appeals is Susan Petito, Special Counsel.

Second, as a general matter, the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law. Since I am unaware of the contents of all of the records in which you are interested, or the effects of their disclosure, I cannot offer specific guidance. Nevertheless, the following paragraphs will review the provisions that may be significant in determining rights of access to the records in question.

In considering the records falling within the scope of your request, relevant is a decision by the Court of Appeals concerning "complaint follow up reports" (DD5's) prepared by police officers and police officers' memo books in which it was held that a denial of access based on their characterization as intra-agency materials would be inappropriate.

The provision at issue, §87(2)(g) of the Freedom of Information Law, enables an agency to withhold records that:

"are inter-agency or intra-agency materials which are not:

- i. statistical or factual tabulations or data;
- ii. instructions to staff that affect the public;
- iii. final agency policy or determinations; or
- iv. external audits, including but not limited to audits performed by the comptroller and the federal government..."

It is noted that the language quoted above contains what in effect is a double negative. While inter-agency or intra-agency materials may be withheld, portions of such materials consisting of statistical or factual information, instructions to staff that affect the public, final agency policy or determinations or external audits must be made available, unless a different ground for denial could appropriately be asserted. Concurrently, those portions of inter-agency or intra-agency materials that are reflective of opinion, advice, recommendation and the like could in my view be withheld.

In its analysis of the matter, the decision states that:

"...we note that one court has suggested that complaint follow-up reports are exempt from disclosure because they constitute nonfinal intra-agency material, irrespective of whether the information contained in the reports is 'factual data' (see, Matter of Scott v. Chief Medical Examiner, 179 AD2d 443, 444, supra citing Public Officers Law §87(2)(g)). However, under a plain reading of §87(2)(g), the exemption for intra-agency material does not apply as long as the material falls within any one of the provision's four enumerated exceptions. Thus, intra-agency documents that contain 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' are subject to FOIL disclosure, whether or not embodied in a final agency policy or determination (see, Matter of Farbman & Sons v. New York City Health & Hosp. Corp., 62 NY2d 75, 83, supra; Matter of MacRae v. Dolce, 130 AD2d 577)...

"...Although the term 'factual data' is not defined by statute, the meaning of the term can be discerned from the purpose underlying the intra-agency exemption, which is 'to protect the deliberative process of the government by ensuring that persons in an advisory role [will] be able to express their opinions freely to agency decision makers' (Matter of Xerox Corp. v. Town of Webster, 65 NY2d 131, 132 [quoting Matter of Sea Crest Constr. Corp. v. Stubing, 82 AD2d 546, 549]). Consistent with this limited aim to safeguard internal government consultations and deliberations, the exemption does not apply when the requested material consists of 'statistical or factual tabulations or data' (Public Officers Law 87(2)(g)(i)). Factual data, therefore, simply means objective information, in contrast to opinions, ideas, or advice exchanged as part of the consultative or deliberative process of government decision making (see, Matter of Johnson Newspaper Corp. v. Stainkamp, 94 AD2d 825, 827, affd on op below, 61 NY2d 958; Matter of Miracle Mile Assocs. v. Yudelson, 68 AD2d 176, 181-182).

"Against this backdrop, we conclude that the complaint follow-up reports contain substantial factual information available pursuant to the provisions of FOIL. Sections of the report are devoted to such purely factual data as: the names, addresses, and physical descriptions of crime victims, witnesses, and perpetrators; a checklist that indicates whether the victims and witnesses have been interviewed and shown photos, whether crime scenes have been photographed and dusted for fingerprints, and whether neighborhood residents have been canvassed for information; and a blank space denominated 'details' in which the officer records the particulars of any action taken in connection with the investigation.

"However, the Police Department argues that any witness statements contained in the reports, in particular, are not 'factual' because there is no assurance of the statements' accuracy and reliability. We decline to read such a reliability requirement into the phrase 'factual data', as the dissent would have us do, and conclude that a witness statement constitutes factual data insofar as it embodies a factual account of the witness's observations. Such a statement, moreover, is far removed from the type of internal government exchange sought to be protected by the intra-agency exemption (see, Matter of Ingram v. Axelrod, 90 AD2d 568, 569 [ambulance records, list of interviews, and reports of interviews available under FOIL as 'factual data']). By contrast, any impressions, recommendations, or opinions recorded in the complaint follow-up report would not constitute factual data and would be exempt from disclosure. The holding herein is only that these reports are not categorically exempt as intra-agency material. Indeed, the Police Department is entitled to withhold complaint follow-up reports, or specific portions thereof, under any other applicable exemption, such as the law-enforcement exemption or the public-safety exemption, as long as the requisite particularized showing is made" [Gould, Scott and DeFelice v. New York City Police Department, 89 NY2d 267, 276-277 (1996); emphasis added by the Court].

Based on the foregoing, the agency could not claim that the complaint reports can be withheld in their entirety on the ground that they constitute intra-agency materials. However, the Court was careful to point out that other grounds for denial might apply in consideration of those records, as well as others that you requested.

For instance, of potential significance is §87(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information Law, which permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof when disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy". That provision might be applicable relative to the deletion of identifying details in a variety of situations, i.e., where a record identifies a confidential source or a witness, for example.

Often the most relevant provision concerning access to records maintained by law enforcement agencies is §87(2)(e), which permits an agency to withhold records that:

"are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would:

Mr. Michael Kitnurse

December 29, 1999

Page - 5 -

- i. interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings;
- ii. deprive a person of a right to a fair trial or impartial adjudication;
- iii. identify a confidential source or disclose confidential information relating to a criminal investigation; or
- iv. reveal criminal investigative techniques or procedures, except routine techniques and procedures."

In my view, the foregoing indicates that records compiled for law enforcement purposes can only be withheld to the extent that disclosure would result in the harmful effects described in sub- paragraphs (i) through (iv) of §87(2)(e).

Another possible ground for denial is §87(2)(f), which permits withholding to the extent that disclosure "would endanger the life or safety of any person". The capacity to withhold on that basis is dependent upon the facts and circumstances concerning an event.

Lastly, in a decision concerning a request for records maintained by the office of a district attorney that would ordinarily be exempted from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Law, it was held that "once the statements have been used in open court, they have lost their cloak of confidentiality and are available for inspection by a member of the public" [see Moore v. Santucci, 151 AD 2d 677, 679 (1989)]. Based upon that decision, it appears that records introduced into evidence or disclosed during a public judicial proceeding should be available. However, in the same decision, it was also found that:

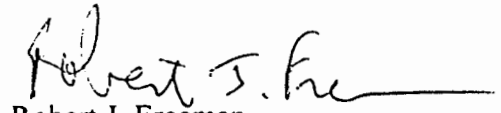

"...if the petitioner or his attorney previously received a copy of the agency record pursuant to an alternative discovery device and currently possesses the copy, a court may uphold an agency's denial of the petitioner's request under the FOIL for a duplicate copy as academic. However, the burden of proof rests with the agency to demonstrate that the petitioner's specific requests are moot. The respondent's burden would be satisfied upon proof that a copy of the requested record was previously furnished to the petitioner or his counsel in the absence of any allegation, in evidentiary form, that the copy was no longer in existence. In the event the petitioner's request for a copy of a specific record is not moot, the agency must furnish another copy upon payment of the appropriate fee...unless the requested record falls squarely within the ambit of 1 of the 8 statutory exemptions" (id., 678).

The Court in Moore also specified that an agency "is not required to make available for inspection or copying any suppression hearing or trial transcripts of a witness' testimony in its possession, because the transcripts are court records, not agency records" (id. at 680).

Ms. Jody Adams

Dear Ms. Adams:

I have received your letter of November 13. You have questioned procedures used by the Town of Riverhead in implementing the Freedom of Information Law and made particular reference to a portion of its application form indicating that a person requesting records should wait at least fifteen days before contacting the office processing a request.

In this regard, based on a review of the form and your comments and notations, I offer the following remarks.

First, as you may be aware, §87(1) of the Freedom of Information Law requires the Committee on Open Government to promulgate general rules and regulations dealing with the procedural implementation of that statute. In turn, the governing body of each public corporation, i.e., a town board, is required to adopt its own rules consistent with the Law and those issued by the Committee. Enclosed is a copy of the Committee's regulations.

Second, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

While an agency must grant access to records, deny access or acknowledge the receipt of a request within five business days, when such acknowledgement is given, there is no precise time period within which an agency must grant or deny access to records. The time needed to do so may be dependent upon the volume of a request, the possibility that other requests have been made, the necessity to conduct legal research, the search and retrieval techniques used to locate the records and the like. In short, when an agency acknowledges the receipt of a request because more than five business days may be needed to grant or deny a request, so long as it provides an approximate date indicating when the request will be granted or denied, and that date is reasonable in view of the attendant circumstances, I believe that the agency would be acting in compliance with law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, in my view, every law must be implemented in a manner that gives reasonable effect to its intent, and I point out that in its statement of legislative intent, §84 of the Freedom of Information Law states that "it is incumbent upon the state and its localities to extend public accountability wherever and whenever feasible." Therefore, if records are clearly available to the public under the Freedom of Information Law, or if they are readily retrievable, there may be no basis for a lengthy delay in disclosure. As the Court of Appeals has asserted:

"...the successful implementation of the policies motivating the enactment of the Freedom of Information Law centers on goals as broad as the achievement of a more informed electorate and a more responsible and responsive officialdom. By their very nature such objectives cannot hope to be attained unless the measures taken to bring them about permeate the body politic to a point where they become the rule rather than the exception. The phrase 'public accountability wherever and whenever feasible' therefore merely punctuates with explicitness what in any event is implicit" [Westchester News v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 579 (1980)].

Further, in my opinion, if, as a matter of practice or policy, an agency acknowledges the receipt of requests and indicates in every instance that it will determine to grant or deny access to records within fifteen days or some other particular period, following the date of acknowledgement, such a practice or policy would be contrary to the thrust of the Freedom of Information Law. If a request is voluminous and a significant amount of time is needed to locate records and review them to determine rights of access, fifteen days, in view of those and perhaps the other kinds of factors mentioned earlier, might be reasonable. On the other hand, if a record or report is clearly public and can be found easily, there would appear to be no rational basis for delaying disclosure for as much as fifteen days. In a case in which it was found that an agency's "actions demonstrate an utter disregard for compliance set by FOIL", it was held that "[t]he records finally produced were not so voluminous as to justify any extension of time, much less an extension beyond that allowed by statute, or no response to appeals at all" (Inner City Press/Community on the Move, Inc. v. New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development, Supreme Court, New York County, November 9, 1993).

Section 3 of the form indicates that the Town Board will respond to an appeal within seven days of the receipt of an appeal. While the Board may choose to respond within that time, I note that

December 30, 1999

§89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law states that the person or body that determines appeals must do so within ten business days of receipt of an appeal.

Lastly, the back of the form listing the reasons for denial is in many respects a reiteration of the grounds for denial appearing in §87(2) of the Freedom of Information Law. Since you circled a provision stating that names and addresses of those filing complaints may be withheld, it has generally been advised that those portions of the complaint which identify complainants may be deleted on the ground that disclosure would result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. I point out that §89(2)(b) states that an "agency may delete identifying details when it makes records available." Further, the same provision contains five examples of unwarranted invasions of personal privacy, the last two of which include:

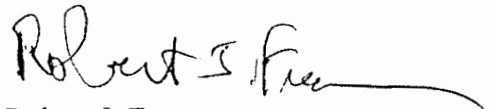

"iv. disclosure of information of a personal nature when disclosure would result in economic or personal hardship to the subject party and such information is not relevant to the work of the agency requesting or maintaining it; or

v. disclosure of information of a personal nature reported in confidence to an agency and not relevant to the ordinary work of such agency."

In my view, what is relevant to the work of the agency is the substance of the complaint, i.e., whether or not the complaint has merit. The identity of a member of the public who made the complaint is often irrelevant to the work of the agency, and in such circumstances, I believe that identifying details may be deleted.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman
Executive Director

96-A-7830
Sing-Sing Correctional Facility
354 Hunter Street
Ossining, NY 10562-5442

Dear Mr. Vitiello:

I have received your letter of November 11 in which you asked whether an agency may rely on §87(2)(e)(i) of the Freedom of Information Law after the person who is the subject of an investigation or judicial proceeding has died, particularly if that was the only provision cited as a justification for a denial of a request when the deceased was alive. That provision permits an agency to withhold records or portions thereof that "are compiled for law enforcement purposes and which, if disclosed, would...interfere with law enforcement investigations or judicial proceedings."

In this regard, if the deceased was the only person under investigation or the only subject of a judicial proceeding, it is likely in my view that §87(2)(e)(i) would no longer serve as a basis for a denial of a request. In short, it is doubtful that the harmful effects described in that provision would continue to arise by means of disclosure.

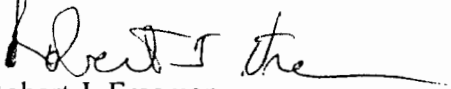

That provision, however, may also encompass other grounds for denial. For instance, when the deceased was alive, the disclosure of records indicating the identity of a witness or confidential source might have interfered with an investigation or judicial proceeding and, therefore, might properly have been withheld under §87(2)(e)(i). While that provision might not be pertinent after the person's death, it is possible that records or portions of thereof might nonetheless be withheld pursuant to §87(2)(b) on the ground that disclosure would constitute "an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" relative to persons other than the deceased, §87(2)(e)(iii) concerning the identification of a confidential source, §87(2)(f) involving endangering life or safety, or perhaps §87(2)(g), which pertains to the ability to withhold certain aspects of internal governmental communications.

In short, even though §87(2)(e)(i) might no longer be applicable after a person's death and might have been the only provision cited while the person was living, other grounds for denial might nonetheless be justifiably asserted.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert J. Freeman

Mr. Anthony Carty
92-A-9491
Green Haven Correctional Facility
Stormville, NY 12582

Dear Mr. Carty:

I have received your letter of November 11 in which you complained that your request for records of the Division of Parole had not been answered.

In this regard, the Freedom of Information Law provides direction concerning the time and manner in which agencies must respond to requests. Specifically, §89(3) of the Freedom of Information Law states in part that:

"Each entity subject to the provisions of this article, within five business days of the receipt of a written request for a record reasonably described, shall make such record available to the person requesting it, deny such request in writing or furnish a written acknowledgement of the receipt of such request and a statement of the approximate date when such request will be granted or denied..."

If neither a response to a request nor an acknowledgement of the receipt of a request is given within five business days, or if an agency delays responding for an unreasonable time after it acknowledges that a request has been received, a request may, in my opinion, be considered to have been constructively denied. In such a circumstance, I believe that the denial may be appealed in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive, or governing body, who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

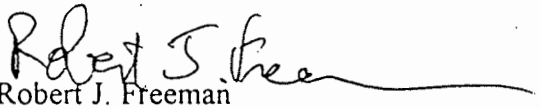

Mr. Anthony Carty
Page - 2 -

In addition, it has been held that when an appeal is made but a determination is not rendered within ten business days of the receipt of the appeal as required under §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law, the appellant has exhausted his or her administrative remedies and may initiate a challenge to a constructive denial of access under Article 78 of the Civil Practice Rules [Floyd v. McGuire, 87 AD 2d 388, appeal dismissed 57 NY 2d 774 (1982)].

For your information, the person designated to determine appeals at the Division of Parole is its counsel, Terrence X. Tracy.

I hope that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Hamilton:

I have received your letter of November 10 in which you referred to a denial of a request for "discovery material" occurring in May of 1998, and you asked the Department of State to "order the Investigation Department at 60 Hudson Street to turn over all the documents [you] requested under the FOIL Law."

In this regard, neither the Department of State nor the Committee on Open Government is empowered to "order" an agency to disclose records. The Committee, however, is authorized to provide advice and opinions concerning the Freedom of Information Law, and based on your letter, I offer the following comments.

First, if a request was denied in 1998, you would have had the right to appeal in accordance with §89(4)(a) of the Freedom of Information Law. That provision states in relevant part that:

"...any person denied access to a record may within thirty days appeal in writing such denial to the head, chief executive or governing body of the entity, or the person therefor designated by such head, chief executive, or governing body who shall within ten business days of the receipt of such appeal fully explain in writing to the person requesting the record the reasons for further denial, or provide access to the record sought."

When an appeal is denied, the person denied access may seek judicial review of the denial pursuant to Article 78 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules (CPLR). If you did not appeal, it is suggested that you resubmit your request.

Second, the courts have provided direction concerning the Freedom of Information Law as opposed to the use of discovery under the CPLR in civil proceedings and discovery in criminal proceedings under the Criminal Procedure Law (CPL). The principle is that the Freedom of Information Law is a vehicle that confers rights of access upon the public generally, while the disclosure provisions of the CPLR or the CPL, for example, are separate vehicles that may require or authorize disclosure of records due to one's status as a litigant or defendant.

As stated by the Court of Appeals in a case involving a request made under the Freedom of Information Law by a person involved in litigation against an agency: "Access to records of a government agency under the Freedom of Information Law (FOIL) (Public Officers Law, Article 6) is not affected by the fact that there is pending or potential litigation between the person making the request and the agency" [Farbman v. NYC Health and Hospitals Corporation, 62 NY 2d 75, 78 (1984)]. Similarly, in an earlier decision, the Court of Appeals determined that "the standing of one who seeks access to records under the Freedom of Information Law is as a member of the public, and is neither enhanced...nor restricted...because he is also a litigant or potential litigant" [Matter of John P. v. Whalen, 54 NY 2d 89, 99 (1980)]. The Court in Farbman, supra, discussed the distinction between the use of the Freedom of Information Law as opposed to the use of discovery in Article 31 of the CPLR. Specifically, it was found that:

"FOIL does not require that the party requesting records make any showing of need, good faith or legitimate purpose; while its purpose may be to shed light on governmental decision-making, its ambit is not confined to records actually used in the decision-making process (Matter of Westchester Rockland Newspapers v. Kimball, 50 NY 2d 575, 581.) Full disclosure by public agencies is, under FOIL, a public right and in the public interest, irrespective of the status or need of the person making the request.

"CPLR article 31 proceeds under a different premise, and serves quite different concerns. While speaking also of 'full disclosure' article 31 is plainly more restrictive than FOIL. Access to records under CPLR depends on status and need. With goals of promoting both the ascertainment of truth at trial and the prompt disposition of actions (Allen v. Crowell-Collier Pub. Co., 21 NY 2d 403, 407), discovery is at the outset limited to that which is 'material and necessary in the prosecution or defense of an action'" [see Farbman, supra, at 80].

Most recently, the Court of Appeals held that the CPL does not limit a defendant's ability to attempt to obtain records under the Freedom of Information Law [Gould v. New York City Police Department, 89NY 2d 267, decided November 26, (1996)].

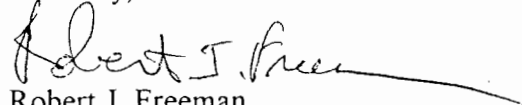

In sum, I believe that the Freedom of Information Law imposes a duty to disclose records, as well as the capacity to withhold them, irrespective of the status or interest of the person requesting them. To be distinguished are other provisions of law that may require disclosure based upon one's status, e.g., as a defendant, and the nature of the records or their materiality to a proceeding.

Lastly, although I am unaware of the nature of the records of your interest, I note that the Freedom of Information Law is based upon a presumption of access. Stated differently, all records of an agency are available, except to the extent that records or portions thereof fall within one or more grounds for denial appearing in §87(2)(a) through (i) of the Law.

I hope that the foregoing serves to enhance your understanding of the Freedom of Information Law and that I have been of assistance.

Sincerely,
