“The Jaymie Gaucher previously indicated is the same Jaymie Gaucher who was recently arrested for failure to report child abuse in the death of Jameson Nance (page 1). It should be noted that Jameson’s father had filed for custody of Jameson on 12/9/2020 (page 3), his mother promptly filed and was granted an injunction for protection from domestic violence on 12/16/2020 (page 9), and Jameson was dead on 6/11/2021. Jameson’s mother is currently charged with first degree murder for Jameson’s death (page 24).”

The DCF worker who investigated was charged with failure to report too. Gonna guess that’s not normal, and as a result that if there was a time to get a DCF investigation worth a shit it’d be now.

More to the point, because you’re an emotionally abusive manipulative liar and the kids deserve better.

Can you please explain the discrepancy between what you said on 12/30/21 and what you said on 2/24/22?

Specifically, how does it go from Wilder played soccer during the fall of 2021 and you "... offered to sign him up again but he didn't want me to. Maybe in the summer." to "... Wilder has been asking to play soccer for the past year. I told him no because of the pandemic..." ?

What have you said to this kids this week regarding soccer? Specifically after I told them Tuesday that they wouldn't be participating while they were with me.

What's Wilder say in that video? Does it match up with the message you sent on 2/15/2022? And you went to Disney, right? And I didn't change or do anything.

Well the judge ordered whatever she ordered. And she seems to think that while there's behavior is a direct result of being with me. I'm simply pointing out that he was fine until after the visit. Understandably. Because it is a big change. And he does not do well with change. It's a lot of emotions for a little kid to handle. He only has one more day of school until winter break so hopefully he will be more evened out by January.

Couple months ago my lawyer filed a motion for the kids and me to undergo reunification therapy. It's probably a good idea that we do that. I'm not an expert, but I'm going to guess there's a lot more to it than "changes in visits."

He's refusing to listen to anyone at school, refusing to leave the classroom, refusing to go to lunch. Just FYI this is how he reacts to changes in visits.

And this is exactly why I said (documented) I wanted soccer to wait.

From my perspective, "explaining" it to them would involve discussing the final judgment with them (among other documents) and I really believe it's best a professional assist with that, so can I take this to mean you've come around on reunification therapy?

I made it clear previously my time with them would be my time with them, so if you've been sitting there telling them they have a game and now you're going to try to pull some crap like "it's your dad's fault you're not going to your game..."

“And then I said I had to ask you.”

Please speak with me before you say something like this to the kids. Whether it's intentional or not, when you do say something like this to the kids it's a form of coercion. My choices at the that point are agree with whatever, say no and have the kids think whatever they think of as much, or say something directly to the kids about how you are involving them in things that should be kept between me and you.

“And I believe genuinely, whether Ms. Locke intentionally did or not, her view of how, for instance, the videos were, was extremely skewed from what the court saw. And I realize that's her perception and her perspective, but that is different than what the court has, which raises the question as to her point of view as to whether there are other aspects that may be skewed or not based upon her perception of things, and I realize it's all different for everyone.”

I didn't put anything in motion. Wilder has been asking to play soccer for the past year. I told him no because of the pandemic. We were talking about Rowan wanting to do dance class and she said she does not want to do dance anymore which was what she had previously said. Now she wants to do soccer. Then while there said he wants to do soccer. And then I said I had to ask you. And here we are. It doesn't have to impact you at all. I could take them on my time when I have them.

You agreed that I could take the kids to Disney if I would do a therapeutic intervention that his occupational therapist said wasn't appropriate. You agreed the kids could play soccer, which is something they both asked to do, if I made our 5-year-old participate in an aggressive martial art that she has no interest in doing.

Your logic is as ridiculous as your parenting ability. Try harder.

One of the best jiu-Jitsu places in Brevard is within their school district and on eau gallie. Ro loves to wrestle with Wilder and she's pretty good at it. I'm not particularly keen on the idea of possibly foregoing my time with them in these early parts of reunification or being put in a position where I'm pressured to forgo my time with them, so Brazilian jiu-jitsu is the compromise that would make me okay with foregoing/possibly foregoing. Otherwise they can just wait until summer and when it's more likely I'm liable to be more mobile.

In the future I would appreciate you reaching a consensus with me before putting things in motion regarding the kids. I'd also appreciate if we can't agree on something that you not involve the kids and hurt them.

Ok. I'm telling you both kids want to do soccer. That's it. If you don't want them to do it then tell me and I will let them know. If it's okay with you that I sign them up and then I will sign them up. It does not have to be this convoluted.
