Summary

Dr. John Alexander is a retired military officer whose 34 years of business and military leadership and management experience include over a decade of combat leadership in the nation's highest priority military unit – the US Army Special Forces- Delta. John's military career was characterized by rapid advancement and repeated placement in the most elite and demanding assignments in the DoD. He was awarded some of the military's highest decorations and received repeated recognition for valor in combat. John's extensive leadership experience is complemented by his training as a Harvard National Security Fellow and graduate of the Harvard Kennedy School Leadership Development program. He has a unique understanding of the DoD after years of working directly with the nations' most senior decision-makers in times of conflict, and personally designing and leading a team composed of multiple US Agencies created to combat terrorism. He now works as a senior executive in multiple private sector, international businesses combining his unique leadership acumen to lead and advise. Dr. Alexander recently developed a new program of instruction to introduce small, medium, and large companies and federal agencies to a deliberate, low cost process for innovation and new value creation.
